Bring Glad Tidings!

TH! HEALTH! HEALTH!

th Restored and Life Prolonged to Suffering Humanity by the most wonderful agents ever discovered.

MYERS' GALVANIC CHAIR!

Electro-Magnetism, and other forms of electricity are now extensively employed in the treatment of the world with the most flattering results. Th Galvanic Chair is my own invention. And one of the best-constructed Electro-Magnetic Apparatus ever necessary applia ces for the treatment of various diseases. The Galvanic is no unpleasant shock, but a pleasant, soothing and steady current, which becomes stronger while the subject sits in the chair. The chair is so constructed that I can give Hot Air, Medicated Vapor Bathing, which cleanses the skin and opens the pores, thereby relieving the nervous nature to remove impurities from the blood. It has been used with success in Gentlemen, and the pores of the skin must be kept open or sickness will prevail. With my chair I can sweat the most delicate patient without the least exertion over the beneficial effects of my treatment. I have given many a person strength from each application. I do away with all debilitated feelings of heat and shock, rendering the feelings of the patient most delightful. Blood and bone and strengthen the whole system, from the brain to the final termination of the various vital organs. I do not debilitate the nervous ramifications of the brain to the final organs. I do not debilitate one minute a cure, but from the commencement invigorate them.
Hundreds of cases supposed to be incurable, and with my apparatus have on occasion to rejoice, and have caused the haggard, downcast face of the pale patient to put on the healthful ruddy glow of health. Many have given many a thankful rejoice to the restoration or painful, contracted, stiff and withered limb, and I cause benefits real, which are wonderful. In making electricity as a remedy applied as an adjuncts with a judicious system of medication I can and do wonders more than I can with either alone. Progressive science has established theories.

INHALATION.

Has been introduced a new treatment by inhalation, by which lung diseases and catarrh are readily.

I HAVE NO ONE CURE-ALL,

but many one modes of treatment. I use electricity or medicines, or both, as I think it is a positive fact that many diseases are caused by impure blood, and to promote a cure is to remove the poison and build up the system by regulating my medical remedies properly applied, will prove to a cure without fail.
Nervousness, all diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Head, Nerves, Kidneys, Bowels, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Gravel, Piles, Scrofula, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Diseases of the Eye and Ear, etc.

TO THE LADIES.

Before I would say: You whose sufferings have become intolerable, and who have tried and desities from those diseases so common to your sex, give me a call, for I can restore health, and make your lives once again worth living for. And all consultations strictly private and confidential.

YOUNG MEN.

Many young men who have suffered from year to year, and whose vital powers have weakened and nervous system unstrung and broken down, and are suffering all the horrible effects of youthful follies, come and see me. I have a sure preventive and cure for your many and early deceptions. To those who, from ignorance, indiscretion, have contracted private diseases or a desirous of being cured, come without fail, for I can guarantee you a

CONSULTATION FREE.

Sick, no matter what their diseases may be, to call and investigate for themselves, holding all hope, for it will cost you nothing. I give no encouragement unless a fair prospect of making a cure. I will endeavor to call to mind in my opinion, as I have in New York City, and a graduate of one of the best medical colleges in the world, and a most thorough Electrician, and have had many years successful practice in both surgical and chronic diseases. To remove all doubts and convince you that nothing but what I say. I refer to my physicians and the numerous recommendations in my possession, which will always be ready for inspection at my office.
Remember, this is the city, and all I ask is that you give me a fair, unbiased hearing and your confidence and I will endeavor to give satisfaction to all suffering humanity that has been acquired by candid, honest dealing, and years of experience in the cause and the remedy needed, not by guess-work, but by years of study in the treatment of various diseases.

Terms to pay for treatment will be treated free of charge between the hours of 10 and 12 a. m. and 2 and 4 p. m.

Office at my office, No. 444 Solomon Block, South Spring street, between First

DYNAMITERS' WORK

Attempt to Blow Up the London Bridge.

NO CLUE TO THE PERPETRATORS.

The Explosion Heard for Ten Miles—Damage Believed to be Slight—A Boot-black's Account.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

LONDON, Dec. 13—6:30 p. m.—A terrific explosion has just occurred in this city. The report was similar to that caused by the explosion of dynamite. One report is that the explosion was of gas in the railway arches of Tolley street. Another is that the bridge over the Thames has been exploded. Inquiry will be made immediately into the circumstances of the explosion.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The explosion is still involved in a mystery. An inquiry at various police offices has elicited the statement that no serious damage was done. The general belief is that some explosive articles were thrown from or beneath the London bridge.

LATER—The explosion was thought at first to have occurred at London Bridge depot, but this proved to be unfounded. Persons on London bridge at the time of the explosion say they heard a loud report and observed two flashes of light. Many panes of glass were broken in the Custom House. The latest accounts show that the explosive material was thrown from London bridge into the Thames, and striking the water, burst into flame. A loud explosion followed. The police are making investigations.

The explosion was heard 10 miles outside of London. At Woolwich arsenal the gates were shaken.

LONDON, Dec. 14—3 a. m.—The explosion at the London bridge occurred at about 5:40 o'clock last evening. The police think the boat, containing the explosives and burning fuse attached, was allowed to drift beneath the bridge. A witness says the flames shot up simultaneously from each side of the bridge. The damage is believed to be slight although the darkness prevented a thorough examination.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—6 a. m.—Beyond doubt an at tempt was made to blow up the London bridge. The police have absolutely no information of the affair. It is now supposed the dynamite used in the explosion was dropped over the bridge and alighted on the bulkhead. The damage done consists chiefly of broken windows in houses in the vicinity. A bootblack relates his experience of the explosion as follows: "I was cleaning a gentleman's boots when suddenly I felt the earth shake about me. Immediately afterwards there was a terrific explosion, and I was stunned. When I recovered consciousness the gentleman had disappeared." The bottom on which the explosion is supposed to have alighted was only slightly damaged. Persons crossing the bridge at the time of the explosion were thrown down and many gas lots in the vicinity extinguished by the concussion.

The Drowned Oystermen.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 13.—The Evening News, in its account of the Rappahannock disaster, says: The officers of the steamer Westmoreland report that so far of the twenty-eight men whose boats capstained in the Rappahannock River at Urbana twenty-eight are known to have been drowned. In addition to these already reported at least twelve were drowned at Canoe House landing on the same river. At Mill creek, another landing on the Rappkarock, a young white man was drowned. In speaking of the fact that no one who were out in boats escaped drowning, an officer of the Westmoreland remarked that they could easily have reached the pier and thus avoided the accident which befell them, but that the squall broke in all its fury so without a moment's notice, and the boats were swamped before they were fully aware of what had taken place.

South American News.

PANAMA, Dec. 14—The Star and Herald announces the resignation of President Carvera, and Secretary of State Dubarry, of the United States of Colombia. President Carvera says: "Were I to continue in office I should offend Republican traditions, which I esteem, and respect, in view of the intervention and influence of a certain class now being exercised. I should have quietly assented or combatted. The latter step would condemn the country to the continuance of the present anomalous situation. The former is opposed to my character as a tolerant member of the liberal party and to my conviction as a patriot.

The death is announced in the Lima mail house of Benito Mato, long and well known in connection with the liberal press of Spanish America.

Germany in the West Pacific.

BERLIN, Dec. 13.—The third installment of the White Book deals chiefly with South Sea affairs, and shows that German commerce still holds the commanding position in independent portion of the western Pacific. The only fears entertained are that Anglo-Australian competition may arise. The Book recommends an increased navy and a permanent German consulship in New Britain and New Ireland, and strongly urges the necessity of enforcing respect for the German flag from English traders.

The Congo Committee.

BERLIN, Dec. 13.—The Congo sub-committee completed its work of drafting their report, embodying the different schemes of neutralization proposed. No decision was arrived at in regard to the American project for territorial neutrality. This project, together with General Sanford's railway scheme, will probably be presented in full to the conference on Monday, when the English delegate will introduce the liquor question.

A Victim to Giant Powder.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Dec. 13.—William Philipott, of Wilson's Pass, Josephine county, held a stick of giant powder in his hand while a blast near by was exploded. The concussion was so great as to explode the giant powder in his hand, which shattered two bones of his arm and tore up the flesh on nearly every part of the body. The shock to the nervous system was so great that Philipott died yesterday after 24 hours of suffering.

Strike of Coal Miners.

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 13.—The coal miners employed in the Hampton railroad mines struck to-night against the proposed mining rates from 2 to 2¼ cents per bushel and the men working in Plume Creek and Sandy Creek resolved to quit work this morning if the tribunal rate of three cents per bushel was not paid. If the operators of these mines insist upon a reduction a general strike of railroad miners is probable, as the latter will refuse to work unless the uniform rate adopted by the trades' tribunal is paid all the miners.

A Colored School Teacher Lynched.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 13.—A morning paper publishes the statement that Reginald Brown, a colored school teacher in a lonely part of Howard county, was hanged yesterday by thirteen masked men. They charged he had become too intimate with a young white woman. He declared he had married her. No record of the marriage could be found. The lynching is said to have occurred in a wild section of the county scarcely populated. At Ellicott City, the county seat of Howard, nothing had been heard of it. The State's attorney sent a messenger to ascertain the facts.

Arrangements for Opening the Exposition.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Commissioner-General Moorehead, of the World's Exposition, at New Orleans, to-day perfected arrangements with the Western Union for the opening of the Exposition by electricity on Tuesday next by President Arthur from the White House. Powerful batteries will be placed in position at Washington and New Orleans, in order that the current of electricity may be transmitted without being repeated en route.

The Blaine Libel Suit.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 13.—In the Blaine-Sentinel libel suit in the Federal court to-day, John C. Shoemaker, President of the Sentinel Company, filed an affidavit asking that further proceedings be stayed until the plaintiff has answered the interrogatories which were filed with the amended bill of discovery. The suit is set for trial on December 23d, and Judge Woods will probably rule on Monday on the request for a stay of further proceedings.

Six Convicts Make a Dash for Liberty.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Dec. 13.—Six convicts working in the coal mine, Coal Creek, Tenn., made a dash for liberty. The guards fired, killing Samuel Musye and Joe Wilson. John Presswell and Hugh Stafford were fatally wounded. The other two were recaptured.

Revolution in Corea

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—The Secretary of the Navy received a cable message this morning from Rear Admiral Davis at Nagasaki, announcing a revolution in Corea and stating that the United States vessels Trenton and Omaha would go there immediately.

DYNAMITERS' WORK

Attempt to Blow Up the London Bridge.

NO CLUE TO THE PERPETRATORS.

The Explosion Heard for Ten Miles—Damage Believed to be Slight—A Boot-black's Account.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

LONDON, Dec. 13—6:30 p. m.—A terrific explosion has just occurred in this city. The report was similar to that caused by the explosion of dynamite. One report is that the explosion was of gas in the railway arches of Tolley street. Another is that the bridge over the Thames has been exploded. Inquiry will be made immediately into the circumstances of the explosion.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The explosion is still involved in a mystery. An inquiry at various police offices has elicited the statement that no serious damage was done. The general belief is that some explosive articles were thrown from or beneath the London bridge.

LATER—The explosion was thought at first to have occurred at London Bridge depot, but this proved to be unfounded. Persons on London bridge at the time of the explosion say they heard a loud report and observed two flashes of light. Many panes of glass were broken in the Custom House. The latest accounts show that the explosive material was thrown from London bridge into the Thames, and striking the water, burst into flame. A loud explosion followed. The police are making investigations.

The explosion was heard 10 miles outside of London. At Woolwich arsenal the gates were shaken.

LONDON, Dec. 14—3 a. m.—The explosion at the London bridge occurred at about 5:40 o'clock last evening. The police think the boat, containing the explosives and burning fuse attached, was allowed to drift beneath the bridge. A witness says the flames shot up simultaneously from each side of the bridge. The damage is believed to be slight although the darkness prevented a thorough examination.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—6 a. m.—Beyond doubt an at tempt was made to blow up the London bridge. The police have absolutely no information of the affair. It is now supposed the dynamite used in the explosion was dropped over the bridge and alighted on the bulkhead. The damage done consists chiefly of broken windows in houses in the vicinity. A bootblack relates his experience of the explosion as follows: "I was cleaning a gentleman's boots when suddenly I felt the earth shake about me. Immediately afterwards there was a terrific explosion, and I was stunned. When I recovered consciousness the gentleman had disappeared." The bottom on which the explosion is supposed to have alighted was only slightly damaged. Persons crossing the bridge at the time of the explosion were thrown down and many gas lots in the vicinity extinguished by the concussion.

Wheat versus Fruit.

In the industries possible to this section of the country we have hardly made more than a beginning. Almost all of our industries are, comparatively speaking, in their infancy. They are simply suggestive of the untold possibilities of the great future which is before us. Our farming and horticultural interests have thus far been largely experimental, and it is but recently that we have learned and adopted the best methods for securing successful results in the varied and rapidly multiplying interests of the farm and orchard. Our farmers are generally capable of placing a just estimate upon the value of scientific knowledge and experiment, and are practically testifying to the fact that something more is necessary to insure success than simple plowing and sowing, and planting and pruning. Our farmers and fruit growers are not working after old and worn-out methods. They are ready for experiment, for the adoption of everything that promises advancement and more desirable results.

And there is no field in the whole world where such encouragement is offered to the skilled farmer and orchardist as right here in this garden spot of California. With an abundance of water there is no more productive soil to be found on the face of the globe than that of this region. It is largely yet a virgin soil, waiting for the magic touch of labor to yield its hundred-fold. It is stated as a fact of actual experience that after land has been saturated by irrigation for a few years, the amount of water required to secure good crops is materially lessened. Another fact, and certainly an encouraging one, which appears to have been fully demonstrated by experience, is that irrigated land apparently "does not wear out—the water acting as a perpetual manure, and renewing its fertility as fast as exhausted by cropping." These facts add, then, to the desirability and the value of lands in Southern California. They cannot be exhausted.

One of the most desirable things for our advancement is the cutting up of our large ranches, and the multiplying of small farms. It is time for some of the immense wheat fields of this State to give place to other and more profitable enterprises. California has an immense acreage devoted to wheat, and during the past year the abundant yield has resulted in ever production. The result has been prices that were ruinous to farmers. In view of this, the natural inquiry is: "Are we not devoting too large a proportion of our rich and fertile lands to wheat-growing, which might much more profitably be devoted to vine and fruit-growing?"

We would by no means advise the entire abandonment of the great wheat industries of the State. Their value is almost untold. But with them let the wheat-grower have a judicious combination of other resources. In every great grain ranch let there be orchards and vineyards planted. The Sacramento Bee says: "An acre of vineyard, almost anywhere in the State, will yield five tons of grapes, worth $30 a ton, making a total of $150, against a total of $19.80 from a yield of 30 bushels of wheat on the same area of land. The profit on the grain is $1.80; on the grapes at least $100. The estimate for grapes is moderate. A single vineyard of 300 acres, near Fresno, is producing this year about 2,000 tons, worth $50,200 at $25 a ton. It would take about 2,500 acres of land, producing thirty bushels to the acre, to raise grain enough to bring that amount this year. What a vast waste of valuable space wheat-growing involves in California."

In regard to the market for California fruit a correspondent writing to the Journal of Commerce, of San Francisco, says: "California fruit, either canned, dried or fresh, is fast making its way abroad. Its fame has reached Europe, and shipments of Bartlett pears and California grapes have been made even to Great Britain to tickle the palates of the gourmand. But at present, it is in the East that the great outside markets for our fruit are found. The great eastern cities are getting to consume more and more fruit every year. Their populations are growing space. There is a large and increasing class in comfortable circumstances among them, and even poorer people are able to indulge in the luxury of fresh and preserved fruit to an extent unknown elsewhere."

In connection with this is the rapidly growing demand for California dried fruits. The evaporated fruits of the State have reached a high standard of excellence, and command in the East paying prices. One of the largest fruit raisers of Santa Barbara, and a most successful experimenter in evaporated fruits, informed the writer that he looked to see the time when the demand for this superior article of evaporated fruits would altogether exceed the possibility of our supply. He also anticipates that in foreign markets, at least, they will largely take the place of canned fruits on account of the less cost and greater convenience of their shipment. Already inquiries and orders for his evaporated fruits are pouring in upon him from every section of the country where his samples have been sent.

With the recent advance in prices our raisin makers are feeling more cheerful. With the world for a market, when the excellence of the California production becomes more fully known, there seems to be no occasion for anything but hopefulness as to the results of this industry. Here is an example of results which we clip from an exchange: "R. B. Blowers in Yolo county, has twenty acres of vineyard devoted to Seedless Sultana grapes. The yield this season is estimated at twenty tons to the acre, and he has been offered $40 per ton, but he will convert the grapes into raisins and thus make more money. $40 a ton would be $800 per acre, or $16,000 for the yield of a vineyard of twenty acres."

Other fruits have proved not less profitable. As illustration of this fact take the following statement from the Sacramento Bee: "J. W. Cassidy's tenacre cherry orchard, near Petaluma, this season produced a crop more valuable than could have been grown on 700 acres devoted to wheat. In full bearing, with the crop worth ten cents a pound, it has been estimated that the yield of his orchard would bring $37,500. But taking only half the sum ($18,500) the returns are more than our estimate would allow from 700 acres of land in wheat."

With such successful experiments before us what may we not hope for the future of the fruit interests of California? The dream of the Argonauts is not yet ended. But it will reach its fulfillment not alone in the gold of our mines, but in the multiplying stores of our fruits, our oil and our vines, and in the gold of our harvest fields gleaming beside the cool emerald of our growing orchards.

Our Churches.

The church has many times been compared by divines to the ark of which we read in the book of Genesis; but never was the resemblance more perfect than during the evil times when she rode alone amid the darkness and tempest on the deluge beneath which all the great works of ancient power and wisdom lay entombed, bearing within her bosom that feeble germ from which a second and more glorious civilization was to spring.

LORD MACAULEY.

It is with peculiar pride that we lay before our readers this morning some account of the churches of this city. It is believed that they are better exponents of the healthy growth of Los Angeles in whatever makes a people truly great than are even our great orchards, broad vineyards or towering business blocks. That was a wise saying of Sir William Hamilton's

"In earth there is nothing great but man. In man there is nothing great but mind."

And so, while we sometimes glory in the rapid strides that we are making in material progress, our real cause of rejoicing lies in the fact that the spiritual man is ministered to with such unsparing liberality in this beautiful city.

Religion is the final center of repose; the goal to which all things seem to tend, which gives to time all its importance, to eternity all its glory; apart from which man is but a shadow, his very existence a riddle, and the stupendous scenes which surround him as incoherent and unmeaning as the leaves which the sibyl scatters to the wind.

To The Westward.

The contrasts of climate are very forcible to strangers coming to this section from the more wintry portions of the country at this season of the year. The vast area of territory embraced within the limits of the United States can be approximately realized in no better way than by leaving the ice-bound coast of the Atlantic and traveling until the semi-tropic warmth and freshness of December is reached upon the sunset shores of California. Then drifting northward again upon the line of this coast until sub-arctic regions are reached and a long winter of storm and night is met upon our northern borders. That there is no section of country that is so favored by nature as the broad domain along the southern portions of these Pacific slopes is no longer a question in the minds of those having an intelligent knowledge of this region of country. And yet with all that has been written of California, its soil, climate and productions, new-comers to this coast are surprised to find here so equable a climate, a soil so productive, and results so encouraging as those already attained. The rocky soil of New England, and the harsh severity of its climate, the severe cold of winter in the great Northwest, the unpleasant extremes to be met with in the climate of the Southern States, all contrast unfavorably with what is to be found here, where we have no wide extremes of heat and cold, and no barren soil that may not be made to yield its harvests through a proper supply of water. More persistently than ever is the eye of the immigrant turned in this direction. More intently does the man of wealth and leisure turn his gaze to the sunset shores of the continent. More hopefully does the heart of the laborer look to the future as he hears of the promise which California holds out to him, and more steadily and strongly does the pulse of civilization beat as its life currents flow to the westward.

THE SAUNTERER.

I love children, but I do not like to see them wise beyond their years. It always makes me afraid of two things: A dwarfed and stunted maturity, as the result of the forcing process that is usually tried upon such children, or of an early death. One of these two things is almost sure to follow the childish prodigy. I was out one day sitting for a few moments's rest in the shade of some orange trees. Soon a young lady with her little brother joined me. There was just a light breeze stirring. The leaves were tremulous in its soft breath. The little boy looked at them with wide-open thoughtful eyes. Then as we spoke he said, "Please don't talk, I want to hear what it says." We did not understand his meaning, yet we honored him. We were silent for at least five minutes. He sat listening intently. At last he drew a long sigh, and said, "O dear, I can't hear what it says!" "What was it, little boy?" I asked. "O, I was trying to hear what the wind whispered to the leaves that made them tremble so," was the answer of the child. Beautiful boy! Unconscious poet! What of thy future?

***

Walking down Spring street the other morning I saw a little girl break loose from her mother's restraining hand, and run gleefully across the street right in front of some spirited horses. The child was as happy as an escaped prisoner, and her laugh rang out joyously. She was a little golden-haired tot not more than three years old. But it was terrible to see the way that mother pounced upon the child when she caught her. She shook her till the little one was almost breathless; then she struck her again and again. I suppose that mother loved her child, and was nervous at the thought of the danger the little one had escaped. But I thought dying is not the worst thing that can happen to such little ones. There is nothing so deplorable as the life that can be hoped for that little golden-haired darling with such a mother as that!

***

I wonder what a man thinks of himself when he swears. Doesn't it ever make him feel mean? I should think it would. I saw a man the other day get very mad. A little dog ran between his feet and almost tripped him up. Didn't he swear though? I wondered which was the brute.

I'm proud of the way that Los Angeles is getting ready for Christmas. There'll be more happy hearts here than in any other city of its size in the country. I do not believe that there is any place where a dollar will go further in purchasing Christmas gifts than in Los Angeles. And this is to the credit of our merchants. I was in at Shward's the other day, and the display was simply a bonanza to the purchaser. That fifty-nine cent sale was, I am sure, a genuine invention of great, large hearted Santa Claus. Then there's the People's Store. Dear me! what can't you buy in the space allotted to the from ten to thirty-five cent tags? Dropping into the City of Paris—that emporium of fashion—I found everything to please the lady of fashion from the finest silks and velvets to articles within the reach of ordinary purses.

In the time of good things for the Christmas table Jevne has a supply that makes the mouth water. And so it is all along the line. Not a house but makes a finer display of all kinds of goods and merchandise than has ever been shown before in this section of the State. In this we do not fail much, if any, behind San Francisco, and in reasonable prices we are ahead. We are growing.

Isn't there a better place for banana peels than the sidewalk? I saw a big boy sit down on one the other morning, and he did not like it. I did not blame him. The atmosphere was sulphurous for the next minute, for the boy could not walk as well when he got up as he did before he sat down on that banana peel to rest. The sidewalk is no place for refuse, and the innocent looking banana or orange peel are often dangerous to life and limb. Keep them off the sidewalk.

UNDERTOW.

Did you ever take a dose of corrosive poison for fun to see how it tastes? Then don't. There's nothing in it. As a tragedy it is only entertaining to the star actor; as a spectacular drama it lacks stage accompaniments; as an opera or comedy, it is a complete failure; and, although the fool is there, it is a very poor substitute for a circus.

The other night I engaged in a wrestling match, a la Father Jacob, with the world-renowned, invincible Señor Don Angel de Pain, Graeco-Roman rules, catch-as-catch can. Between two and three in the morning, finding I was getting the worst of the falls, I meanly essayed to smuggle in an assistant in the shape of a soothing lotion which my good friend the Dr. had left on the stand by my bed. I thought I knew exactly where the bottle and spoon were, and reached for them. Through some inadvertence, a bottle, "some at resemblin'" the other, but containing ammonia and other villianous compounds for the cleaning of marbles, occupied its place. Since my castor oil days up to my present age—we won't be particular about dates—I have entertained a certain prejudice against the taste of medicine, in consequence of which, when forced to summon its potency, I close my eyes, imagine a thumb and finger griping my nose, thrust the spoon as far down the throat as that orifice will admit of, then lose consciousness of all subsidiary things and gulp. This is political economy working two way. You get the whole dose and the entire effects afterwards; also fulfills a scientific law of organic nature, whereby nothing is lost. Instantly becoming aware of what I had done, I made use of a short but expressive sentence requiring an exclamation point at the end. My companion was on her feet in a moment, with an expression of face and attitude that would have made her fortune as Lady Macbeth on any stage in the world, could she evoke it at will. I knew at once the time for action was nearly outlawed, and the time for even thinking very limited; so I "thunk" very lively. A horrified messenger went flying out into the wild night in search of the antidote fiend. Five minutes were consumed in making a short verbal will and leaving minute instructions for the future guidance and assistance of the President in conducting Governmental affairs. Then, by a strange perversity of nature, I remembered an anecdote I once read of poor Tom Hood, who, when in his last agonies, was given a teaspoonful of ink by his distracted servant, in mistake for medicine, calmly asked for a sheet of blotting paper to swallow after it. I thought if we only had half a pound of soap-green for me to swallow, we might have as beautiful a kettle of soft soap as ever delighted any lady from Cork for a day's scrubbing. Doubtless you have all heard of the man in the Bible who casually remarked that certain kinds of pains had "got hold on him," though, whether it was green apples or watermelons he had taken, we are not informed. Well, all this time the miniature Vesuvius in my stomach was in full blast, and the odors of burnt flesh strongly reminded one of a dead day with the "King of the Canibal Islands." Thought and memory began to grow confused, when the door flew open and the antidote fiend danced wildly in and grappled with me. Short, fierce, but decisive encounter.

I am not going to say positively that the A. F. knocked my teeth down my throat, or blacked my eyes, though I do know that for some days I was unable to speak or swallow, and my vision is still a little indistinct; neither will I be put upon oath as to whether he dislocated both shoulders and distributed a complication of compound fractures impartially among my other bones. I can only say, after results as above, to point to that conclusion. By the time he had got through with me he had made away with what little the poison had left, and I was stranded at high water mark, a total wreck. However, I still live, doubtless as a retributive fiend for the chastening of unholy editors.

***

If you ever feel inclined to evoke the aid of materia medica during the small hours of the night, rise calmly, carefully don your terrestial habiliments, proceed to light the gas in the parlor, dining-room, library, bed-room and kitchen, slowly peruse the label on the bottle by each gas jet, translate it into Greek, Latin, French and Spanish, meditatively open the outer door, call in the cat, then administer the dose to her.

***

There are times, even now, in my softer and more pensive moments, as my mind reverts to that antidote fiend, that a flood of beautiful and tender regrets passes over my soul consequent upon my failing to "fetch him one."

***

N. B.—Just lay low. If ever I catch that A. F. in a shady place, without his friends, if I don't put a shovelful of red-hot coals down his throat, and when they have thoroughly done their work, send two quarts of strong vinegar, and an equal quantity of similarly soothing ingredients to keep them company, then my name is not

Two Opinions.

"The loftiest and purest love too often does but fan the cloud of life with endless fire and pain."—Shelia.

Know you the little god, dimpled and smiling?
Fair, golden locks and innocent eyes;
While from his coaxing lips, rosy and tempting,
Breathes the soft perfume of tenderest sighs.

Though he seems guileless and trusting and truthful;
Prythee, young maiden, beware of his wiles;
List, while I whisper—his name is "Don Cupid;"
Often, too often, tears wait on his smiles.

Ah! the rosy rascal;
Ah! the witching sprite;
Flitting through our day dreams,
In carelessness by night;
Dancing in a sunbeam,
Hiding in a flower,
Peeping from a rose's heart,
Laughing in a shower;
Laughing most at lockesmiths;
Never does so light,
Or so cleverly guarded,
But will open quite
At the slightest contact
Of love's magic wand;
Type of watchless power,
Clasped in dimpled hand.

All the earth is radiant,
Blossoms red and white,
All the waters singing,
Mad with love's delight;
Take your senseless struggles
After name and place,
All their sordid longings
From my heart efface,
Tell me not of sorrows,
Tell me not of tears,
Hidden in the shadows
Of the coming years;
Love contends with sorrow,
Hushing all her cries,
Tears can never quench the light
In his all-glorious eyes.

How the Churches Are Growing—Early History.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle saint or martyr; many of all."

HOOKER.

That Los Angeles is a church going city is plainly shown by the fact that there are, including the missions, twenty-five religious organizations in this city, nearly all provided with houses of worship. Few eastern cities are better furnished with religious facilities and the metropolitan character of our population is well indicated by the diversity of creeds represented. The change in a few years is indeed remarkable. Not long ago Los Angeles bore a most unsavory reputation, it being supposed to be as devoid of all good as the typical Nazareth. The border ruffians made it their headquarters and scarcely a night passed that some fatal shooting scrape did not take place. With the new era of immigration has come a different class of people, and Los Angeles can now boast of as quiet an orderly a city, considering its size, as is to be found in the country. The citizens, religious believers and unbelievers, are thrown alike liberal in their contributions to houses of worship, and the result is a very creditable showing. Yet it should be added, as illustrating the wonderful progress during the past two years, that sixteen of the twenty-three religious edifices in the city have been built within that period.

With a view of presenting a record of this progress in a manner which will be interesting and useful for reference the TIMES has been at some pains to collect information concerning the religious organizations of Los Angeles, which is presented this morning. Considering the large number of people who are members of the churches, and the still larger number, who, while not members, are regular attendants, it is believed the information will be acceptable.

Methodist Episcopal.

The first service by a Methodist Episcopal clergyman in Los Angeles was held in 1853 by Rev. John Brier. This gentleman had crossed the plains with an ox team and found the pueblo decidedly unprepossessing in appearance, and destitute of all Protestant places of worship. He preached to a small audience in an adobe where the Court-house now stands. In the fall of that year Adam Bland arrived here as a missionary of the denomination, and a church was soon established in a former billiard saloon close to the present location of the Pico House. Later this property was purchased but, the war breaking out, it became unadvisable to attempt to hold the field here, the property was deeded back, and nothing more done until 1867, when Mr. Bland returned and called a meeting of the Methodists of the county which resulted in bringing them together. A church was again organized, and the same year the little brick building on Fort street, next to the present edifice, was built and occupied until 1874, when it was decided to build a new church, and immediately $8000 were subscribed toward the enterprise. The church was completed in 1875 at a cost of $16,000, and dedicated the succeeding year. Two years ago a gallery was added at an expense of $2000, and a little later a fine pipe organ, costing $2500, was placed in the church. In 1881 Dr. J. P. Widney contributed a bell for the belfry of the church—a memorial of the death of his wife. The present membership of the church is 500, and of the Sabbath school 550. The pastor is Rev. P. F. Bresee, who assumed charge in September, 1883. The services are held at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. The church is crowded to its utmost capacity at all of its services and is very prosperous. A committee has been appointed to arrange for the construction of a lecture room and, when this is when thrown open, will add still further to the seating capacity of the church.

ASBURY CHURCH.

Asbury Church, East Los Angeles, was the pioneer house of worship in that suburb. Its construction was commenced in 1882 and it was completed and dedicated the same year. The cost of the building was $8000, the expense being mainly borne by the Fort Street Church. The membership is twenty-five and there is a flourishing Sabbath school with two hundred scholars. Rev. E. S. Chase is the pastor. Services are held morning and evening.

GRACE CHURCH.

Grace Church, on East First street, south of Alameda, grew out of a mission in the neighborhood. The edifice was built in 1883 by the Fort Street Church at a cost of $6000. There is a membership of 80 and a Sabbath school of 200 scholars. Rev. Mr. Van Deventer is pastor. Services are held morning and evening.

UNIVERSITY CHURCH.

The University Church is a handsome edifice in West Los Angeles, erected in 1884 at a cost of $9000. As its name indicates it is part of the University of Southern California, although open to the public at all of its services. Its seating capacity is six hundred. Rev. P. M. Coburn is pastor and services are held each Sabbath morning and evening.

BOYLE HEIGHTS CHURCH.

The Boyle Heights Church was built this year by the Fort-street society at a cost of $4500. The membership is thirty with a Sabbath school of one hundred scholars. Rev. J. A. Wachob is pastor.

M. E. Church South.

Trinity M. E. Church South was built in 1874 on Spring street between First and Second streets, the expense being provided for by missionary appropriation. Rev. A. M. Campbell was the first pastor and superintended the construction of the church. In 1883, so rapid had been the enhancement of the value of real estate on Spring street, that the trustees found that they could sell the property for $16,000, a sum nearly treble the original cost. The society immediately purchased a lot on Fort street between Fifth and Sixth and built a church costing $22,500, all of which has been paid. The church is very commodious, having a seating capacity of eight hundred, and can be increased by opening the lecture room so as to accommodate 100 more. The windows are of stained glass and the gas jets are lighted by electricity, a novel invention, working perfectly. The membership of the society is one hundred and fifty and of the Sunday school one hundred and eighty, both showing a steady increase.

A MISSION TWO EAST OF ANGELINA.

It is the intention of the M. E. South Church to establish a mission in East Los Angeles to be called the Centennial Church. The title is in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of American Methodism.

Congregational.

The first Congregationalist organization in this city was made in May, 1867. In 1869 a lot was purchased on New High street and the old church built, occupied by the society until last year, when the present edifice at the corner of Hill and Third streets was constructed. The matter of building a new church came up at the annual session of 1880, but nothing was done till 1882 when a lot was purchased on Fort street. This was sold a few weeks later and the beautiful edifice now occupied by the society commenced on the Hill-street lot. This was completed at a total cost of $23,973, no debt remaining on the church at the time it was dedicated. The total membership of the society is 230, of the Sabbath school 200. A fine pipe organ costing over $3500 was purchased last year, and placed in the church. The society has prospered under the pastorate of Rev. A. J. Wells, who was installed July 11th, 1883.

PARK CHURCH.

Park church, on Beaudry avenue, west of town, was the outgrowth of a mission Sunday school started a few months ago with a membership of forty-four. The services for some time were held in a tent, but the school grew so rapidly that it was decided to build a church. This was commenced in October and completed a few weeks later, at a cost of $700. There is no regular pastor. The church has a membership of seventeen, and the Sabbath school of one hundred. Services are held morning and evening.

RAILROAD MISSION CHAPEL.

The Railroad Mission was organized in 1883 by Geo. T. Hanly, who has since acted as superintendent. In the fall of last year a church was built on Chavez street, costing $3,430. There are no regular services held, but the Sabbath school meets every Sunday at 3:30 and 7:30 p. m.

SANSAVAIN MISSION.

The Sansavain Mission Chapel was built by the First Congregational Church last year on Sansavain street at a cost of $440. The building has been occupied one year, and there are 120 scholars. The school meets at 3 p. m. each Sunday. Mr. Blackman acts as Superintendent.

Presbyterian.

The First Presbyterian Church in this city was organized in 1855, the first minister being the Rev. James Woods. Services were held in the courthouse for sometime, and afterwards the society built a brick church at the corner of Temple and New High streets—later occupied by the Episcopalians. The society ceased to exist in 1868, but was reorganized in 1874 by Rev. A. F. White, and services held in Good Templar's Hall. In 1879 Rev. J. W. Ellis assumed charge and has since been the pastor. The new church located at the corner of Fort and Second streets was commenced in 1882 and completed and dedicated in 1883. Its cost was $35,500. The church contains three apartments—an audience room, lecture room and parlors. The seating capacity is 750. An organ costing $3,000 was purchased in June, 1883. The membership of the church is 260; of the Sabbath School, 200. Services are held morning and evening each Sabbath.

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Second Presbyterian Church is located at the corner of Daly street and Downey avenue, East Los Angeles, and was built in 1882 at a cost of $7040. Rev. J. M. Boal is pastor. The membership of the church is twenty seven, of the Sabbath school one hundred and twenty-five.

THIRD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Third Presbyterian church is located at the corner of Hill and Pico sts., in the Morris' vineyard tract, south of town. Rev. W. C. Stevens is pastor. The building cost $2,500. The church membership is twenty-one, Sunday school membership, one hundred and twenty-five. Services are held morning and evening.

Catholic.

Shortly after the opening of the Mission San Gabriel, in 1773, occasional services were held in the pueblo of Los Angeles by the Catholic fathers. The Church of Our Lady of the Angels, located at the corner of Main and Upper Main streets, was not built until 1826. The first parish priest was Father Geronimo Boscana, a Franciscan friar. The first baptism was on the fourth of March, 1826. The church continued without much change till 1861, when new foundations were laid and many other improvements made. Rev. Peter Vesdagner assumed charge in 1863 and has since continued as the chief priest of the parish. His assistants are Rev. John Purjot and Rev. Louis Gordon. Services are held every day during the year, as follows; Week days—Masses at 6:30 and 7 a. m. Rosary, 7:30 p. m. Sundays—First mass, 6:30 a. m.; second mass, 9 a. m.—ceremony in English; last mass, 10 a. m.—ceremony in Spanish. Sunday school in English, 11:30 a. m.; Sunday school in Spanish, 2 p. m.; Vespers, 3 p. m. The choir of the church is conducted by the girls of the school of the Sisters of Charity.

THE CATHEDRAL.

The Cathedral of St. Vibiana, on North Main street, was built in 1876, being modeled after that of Barcelona, Spain. It was consecrated April 30th, 1876. The cost of the edifice was $75,000. The seating capacity is about 1500 and the building is crowded every Sabbath. The interior is very handsome and the decorations artistic. The vestry was built two years ago and the pipe organ, costing $4000, purchased and placed in the cathedral five years ago. The church clergy are as follows: Bishop, F. Mora, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles; Very Reverend J. Adam, V. G.; Rev. P. Harnette, Rev. P. J. Kellegher, Rev. P. Scannell. Sunday hours of service are as follows: First Mass, 6:30 a. m.; second, 8 a. m.; High mass, 10 a. m.; Vespers, 7 p. m.; Sabbath school, 3 p. m. The membership of the Cathedral is over one thousand. It is the intention to build a parochial school edifice shortly.

Episcopalian.

The first Episcopalian services in this city were held Christmas day 1864 in the Odd Fellows' Hall. The present rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church officiated. During the next two years these were the only Protestant services held in Los Angeles. Early in 1865 the brick church, at the corner of Temple and New High streets, was occupied by the society, and this place under the title of St. Athenasius Church, continued to be used by the society until Christmas Day, 1883, when the new and handsome St. Paul's Church on Olive street, between Fifth and Sixth streets, was opened to the public. During the period above mentioned the Church has had several rectors, Mr. Birdsall returning to the charge three years ago.

The seating capacity of St. Paul's Church is 400. The total cost including the lot, pipe organ, furniture, etc., was $33,000. The organ cost $1,875 and the windows $2,000. The membership of the church is 300; of the Sabbath school 175. There is a daily parish school in the rear of the church. Services are held at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m.

It is the largest Protestant church in Los Angeles, having a seating capacity of 1200. There is a large baptistry, the dimensions of which are 10x3 feet. O. W. CHILDS' TRACT.

Opinions of the Press Upon the Enterprise.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

Opening of the O. W. Childs Tract.

From the Los Angeles Daily Times, Nov. 23.]

An important improvement and enterprise will be commenced in a few days on south Main street. The O. W. Childs tract, comprising six blocks lying between Main and San Pedro streets, is to be subdivided and placed on the market in lots. These lots, large and at the uniform rate of $200, are to be sold on a plan by which the buyer of a lot pays $20 down and $10 per month installments for twenty-two months, at the end of which time, or before, he pays up in full and receives a deed from Mr. Childs. The position of his lot is determined by chance, the matter being arranged by a committee selected by the shareholders, each shareholder having an equal opportunity at the expiration of six months, at which time the drawing for choice takes place. The tract is to have new streets opened through it as speedily as possible, and every block will be lighted by an electric light. The land is covered with fine deciduous and semi-tropical trees, and the property is considered among the most valuable pieces of property in the portion of the town. There are many fine springs on the tract. Water and sewer pipes can easily be laid, and the subscription will spare no expense to make the enterprise a success. It is probable certain lots will double in value within a year. The subscription books are to be opened this week. J. M. Dunean & Co., of the Diamond House, will act as agents.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

The O. W. Childs Tract to be Divided and Placed on the Market.

From the Los Angeles Evening Express, Nov. 23.]

The O. W. Childs tract, which comprises six complete blocks and portions of twelve others, commencing at Main street, and running in the rear of O. W. Childs, and running back to San Pedro street, and now covered with orange trees and vines from five to seven years of age, is about to be divided into 200 building lots and disposed of in a manner that is are to greatly improve that favorable section of our city and enhance its value. The same terms, $20 down and $10 per month, will be sold to this; Subscriptions will be received at the uniform price of $200 per lot. At a certain time, to be held in the future, after all lots have been disposed of, a meeting of the subscribers will take place, their names will be written on slips of paper, and placed in a box by some disinterested witness, and each shareholder in turn has his lot drawn as it is drawn. It is beyond question that the value of these lots, more particularly those on corners as well as those fronting on Main street, are worth two or three times $200, and it is thought that all of them are worth at least $300 each. The plan of the subscription is that anyone with a situation will be able to secure one, the first being $20 and the balance at the rate of $10 per month. Six electric masts are to be erected on the tract at once. The disposal of so many splendid building locations in this manner will doubtless stimulate building in that section to a marked degree. A more detailed announcement of the plan will appear in the advertising columns of the Express next week. Messrs. J. M. Duncan & Co. will be the agents for Mr. Childs in obtaining the subscriptions.

New Homestead Enterprise.

From the Los Angeles Daily Herald, Nov. 23.]

One of the most feasible and at the same time one of the most practical and attractive homestead enterprises that has ever been inaugurated in Southern California, is about to be started, and will be fully explained in a few days in the advertising columns of the Herald. It consists in the subdivision of the celebrated Childs tract, lying between South Main and San Pedro streets, of this beautiful piece of well-matured citrus trees and vines has been laid out into 200 lots, with streets and alleys, which will be put cash for as soon as the nominal price of $200 per lot, payable in easy installments, each lot. These lots are worth $300 each, while none of them are worth less than the uniform price asked. At the end of six months the purchasers chosen a committee to draw by lot for choice of lots, so there will be an equal chance for each purchaser to get a choice piece of ground with upon. Six electric light masts will be erected on the tract, which will illuminate the whole tract brilliantly and make it, with the beautiful orange groves, one of the most attractive residence localities in the city. The facilities for access, drainage, sewerage and water supply are of the highest order. The fact that many of our merchants, professional and business men have already selected homesteads on lots adjoining this beautiful tract and built up elegant homes will make this one of the choicest locations in the city. J. M. Duncan & Co. of the Diamond House, are agents for this new homestead tract, and will be prepared to put them on the market in a few days. This homestead enterprise will revive the building boom in the residence portion of the city, and no doubt be a great success.

BY MARY ADAMS JAMESON.

XXVI.

THE END OF A CLUE.

Daniels wrote at once to the address on the card and received this answer by return mail:

"DEAR SIR: Your favor received. I remember the lady well. She was very intelligent and accomplished. I had the pleasure of securing for her almost immediately a position as governess in the family of a friend—Mr. Lester Van Thorpe of this city. A year ago they went abroad for a term of years, and she accompanied them. A recent letter states that they are now traveling in Switzerland, but expect to reach Rome by September next and settle down there for the winter. I would address them at that city, care of the American Legation.

"I have the honor to be yours truly.

"WM. H. DALTON."

What a burden was lifted from his heart! He could endure the rest now, given the knowledge that she had outlived life's span a little for him and be infinitely better for her. She was older now, and wiser, and had seen more of the world. Let her choose one more suited to her years. He held her to no promise.' He would never again renew his suit. It had been a folly before; it would be doubly so now. Yet it was clearly his duty to find her and give her the highway left in his care. The heart is prone to clutch at the first straw that offers itself to save a drowning hope. He would arrange his affairs at once for an indefinite absence. Jarvis should be his compagnon de voyage. He would begin operations this very day! Yet it was toward the middle of September before he could satisfactorily wind up his practice and begin his self-imposed pilgrimage. Helen Campbell accompanied them to New York. Through Mrs. Romaine she had been offered the position of first soprano lady in the choir of St. John's church. She would not accept it, however, till Rev. Mr. Malcolm and his sister had consented to receive the vestry at the rectory and assume the supervision of their education. Caddy she would not part with under any circumstances.

"Thanks to Mrs. Sauns' handsome bequest, their future was amply provided for. On the morning of the steamer was to sail, Daniels came round with a carriage and took Helen and Caddy down to the harbor to see them off. When they were slighting Jarvis and another gentleman stepped forward to meet them. Daniels said:

"Miss Helen; this is my nephew, Mr. Leyton; Bruce, Miss Campbell."

"I had the pleasure of meeting Miss Campbell several years ago in Glenfern. Perhaps she will remember the little drums of a lost boy, in which master Caddy here played the hero."

Ah! Did she not remember it and the sorrow that came to her a little later? She had grown used to it at last, as we do all things in life. She had learned to smile again and feel some pleasure in living, but always with a strange sensation of wonder to herself. Tears filled her eyes at memories of that time crowded upon her. She could not trust herself to speak, and indeed the clanging of the great bell precluded the necessity for any reply. There were hurried good-byes, Daniels saying in his chivalrous way:

"I leave Miss Helen in your care, Bruce. See that she gets back safely and don't let Caddy get homesick.

"All right, Uncle Philip! It will afford me great pleasure to contribute in any way to Miss Campbell's comfort and amusement, and as for Master Caddy—I think we'll be capital friends."

That was enough for Caddy; his dimpled hand stole softly in one of Mr. Leyton's, and looking up into his face he added in a whisper,—"An' sister Nellie, too—you'll love her mos' as well as I does."

Leyton dropped a smiling assent into the big, blue eyes, while Daniels was exchanging a few words with Helen. Then the two men disappeared over the black sides of the steamer.

Ten days later, after a stormy passage they touched at Havre. The day was bright and balmy and, as the steamer was to lie there an hour, Jarvis and Daniels strolled out upon the wharf and stood watching the loading and unloading of freight and the [illegible] costumes of the peasants. Above them on the guards stood a young couple from New Orleans looking down on the picturesque scene below. Near them was a colored nurse holding an infant, that gurgled softly and snatched after bits of sunshine, which sparkled on the dark waters below. All at once there was an outcry, a woman's piercing scream, a splash, and then dire confusion. An Italian, a fellow passenger, now came running with a large water-spaniel along the lower deck and cried:

"Give me some ding de child wear vent."

They threw down a little sock.

"Now," to the nurse, "de place where it went down."

"Right here, marse, right here."

He held the tiny sock to the dog's nose for him to smell it, then said in a low, quiet tone, "Go down, Carlo, and fetch it up."

The dog instantly obeyed. He was gone probably five minutes, but it seemed a half hour to those watching with such intense anxiety.

He came up panting, and blowing the water from his mouth, but did not have the child.

"Go back, Carlo, and fetch it up," and the Italian.

The faithful creature again dived in his treasure. Scarcely a moment elapsed before bubbles began to form on the surface of the water, and directly the dog arose to the surface, holding in his clothes of the babe in his mouth. A great shout rose from the quay, and cries of 'Give it here' went from mouth to mouth.

It was handed to Daniels as the only physician on board, who soon resuscitated it, and laid it in its mother's arms, fortunately none the worse for its sudden baptism.

The parents offered a large sum of money for the dog, but the Italian answered in his broken English, and with one hand laid caressingly on the dog's head:

"My dog is not for sale, lady; I hafs it as much as to travel I wants—my Carlo is not for sale."

They reached London weary of the sea; it had been a long, tedious voyage to Daniels, anxious and impatient of delay. He forced himself to remain over a day, in order to transact some important business, although he longed in his heart of hearts that he might fly through space and end at once the suspense which weighed so heavily upon him. To know the worst he felt was far better than to feel its foreshadowings and know nothing definite.

The next morning at breakfast the "Times" were brought to them. Daniels picked up a copy of the London Times, and the first item which caught his eye, was the following advertisement in large letters and heavily leaded:

£1,000.—A REWARD OF £1 000 will be paid to any person or persons giving accurate information concerning Lord Chilton, eldest son and heir of the Earl of Dunraven, leading to his restoration to his family if living and if dead to the discovery of his heirs. The last known [illegible] was in 18—, when he took passage in the steamer "City of Flanders" for [illegible] sailing under his family name of Jarvis.

MATHEW JENNINGS, Solicitor,
99 Chancery Lane, London.

Daniels looked surprised and delighted for a moment, then carefully folded it, glancing at the close of Jarvis, who was quietly eating his breakfast, oblivious alike to the searching scrutiny and the chain with a missing link.

"Impossible," he thought, shrugging his shoulders, and turned to the foreign dispatches. They went direct to Florence. It was a first duty as well as a sad pleasure that Daniels imposed upon himself to make a pilgrimage to the grave of his dead boy, of whose existence he had never known till he had been an angel many a year.

Had he lived he would have been at man's estate and would have demanded, with every right to know, why such silence hung about his mother's name. How could he have told him the truth and lived? For his sake he might have braved the world again and handed down to him ancestral name and estates, but with the Stuyvesant blood in his veins, he would have suffered, as he had done, unspeakable torment. He could never be thankful enough that the tiny life was so brief. God saw the end from the beginning, and in mercy took him to himself.

Daniels left Jarvis at the Medicean Gallery and drove rapidly to the English burying-ground. He wished to be alone with his dead. Some instinct drew him to a tiny shaft of exquisite Carrara marble. It stood in the center of a grassy plat ten feet square, inclosed by an iron railing. It bore only this inscription:

SCHUYLER STUYVESANT,
Aged 2 years.

Below it the question of Gehazi and the answer of the Shunamitish woman: "Is it well with the child?" "It is well."

The glossy, green foliage of an immense olive tree partly shaded the plat. Within its shadow was a rustic chair. Everything betokened careful, loving attention. He stood uncovered; the place was sacred. Some one approached. He turned and faced a brawny Scotchman, who doffed his cap in simple Highland fashion.

"Ye ken the laddie?" with quiet directness, searching the pale, grief-touched face. Daniels, frowning upon the intruder, merely bowed, while the other's face kindled and he eagerly continued:

"An' the mither—ye ken the bairn's mither?"

Daniels had been too much absorbed in his own sad thoughts to give the man more than a casual glance, but now he drew himself erect, and with his eagle glance swept him from head to foot; then replied with cold hauteur:

"Who are you, and what do you know of the mother?"

"I'm Donald McDougall, my laird, the faithfu' servant an' attendant o' my leddie, till she gang back to her ain countrie. She was a sweet leddie, and guid as sweet, but alake! sae broken-hearted at the loss o' the bairn. She built the Swiss cot ye see yonder, an' wad come hame frae her wanderings sair an' weary. She wad come here ilka morning, an' pass the hours a-croonin' to the bairn as if 'twas playin' on the groun' at her feet. An' a bonnie, winsome lad it was wi' check like the rose an' e'e sae sheen as siller. When she gang awa frae the twal year syne, she spak sae waefu':

'Dinna forget the bairn, Donald, dinna forget the bairn!'

"She knew I wadna forget an' ilka year sent meikle siller fa' the care o' it; but it's a'most gang, an' when she didna sen' or come hersel this simmer, I was fearfu' somethin'd gang agley."

"The boy's mother died in the early summer, and among the bequests was one of $10,000 to yourself. I found also a letter addressed to you, probably the last she ever wrote. Both it and this check I give you, as directed by her will. I will be responsible henceforth for the care of this grave, and will regularly remit to you all necessary funds. I only ask that you shall be as faithful to your trust in the future as you have been in the past."

The brave Highlander had stood with bowed, uncovered head, the tears falling fast over his bronzed cheeks; he now lifted his head quickly and said in a tremulous voice:

"It's an ill wind that blaws naebody any guid, sir. I'm thankfu' that my leddy remembered me sae kindly, but, alake! my heart's sae sair to think she'll come hame nae mair. The laddie an' the mither both has gane an' left me, but," with a ring of pride in the voice, "Donald McDougall winna forget the bairn, my laird, winna forget the bairn."

He strode rapidly away and was soon lost to view.

When Daniels returned to the gallery, Jarvis was standing before Raphael's "Transfiguration," and something of the glorious spirituality of the picture seemed to have dropped upon his face, transfiguring it with a radiance almost unearthly; Daniels stood a little ways apart watching him. He was loth to break the spell. Presently he saw two gentlemen walk rapidly toward the picture before which Jarvis was standing; one was middle-aged—slightly stooped and wore green goggles; the other was a slim, beardless youth, probably making his first Continental tour.

They proved to be an English lord traveling with his son. The elder gentleman started back with an exclamation of horrified surprise.

"My God! Chilton! Where did you drop from? We've thought you dead these twenty years."

Jarvis turned slowly from the picture and looked at them only half comprehending. At last he spoke. "Gentlemen, you're mistaken in the man; that is not my name."

"Come now, old fellow! Don't try to palm that joke off on me—an old college-chum of yours. But let me introduce the eldest son and presumptive heir of your humble servant, the Earl of Bascombe. Time has left his marks on you as upon myself, but I would recognize you anywhere. Of course we know you are the Late Earl's heir, but we applied the other title to you as most familiar and first on the lip. Pardon the omission and permit me to congratulate Lord Chilton, of Chilton Place, on succeeding to the title and estates of the Earl of Dunraven, of Dunraven Castle," cordially extending his hand, "and welcome you back to the English peerage."

Jarvis thoroughly comprehended now and said with a grave, serious face:

"Gentlemen! I say again you are mistaken. I have lived all my life in America and have never been in England except to pass through it a few days ago."

The English lord stood speechless in open-mouthed amazement for a moment, then readjusted his goggles and carefully scrutinized him again. Finally he exclaimed:

"Great Heavens! I never saw such a likeness!"

They walked away without looking at the picture, which Jarvis again turned to examine.

"A singular coincidence" thought Daniels, remembering the advertisement which he had seen in the London Times. "I will make it a point to examine that matter when this burden which I carry is off my mind."

At Rome they went straight to the American Legation and made necessary inquiries. They learned that Madam Van Thorpe had arrived about the 1st of September, and had taken apartments at the adjoining hotel. Shortly after a little daughter was taken suddenly ill, and as soon as she could bear it the physician had ordered general travel, by easy stages, as the best restorative. That it would be the more difficult to trace them, because they had been advised to avoid the beaten tracks of ordinary travel as far as possible, and to seek out-of-the-way nooks and corners, where pure air and absolute rest would the most likely be found. This was all the information they could obtain. They had reached the end of the clue; yet neither was willing to give up the search. However, they would necessarily have to follow some systematic modus operandi which would require a little time to arrange and put into practice. Jarvis's trust grew more steadfast and his faith more sublime the darker and more intricate grew the way. He would say with a cheery smile:

"Somehow I feel as how He is leading us and I'm resting on that."

Daniels nervous system was strung up to the highest pitch and he writhed with the keenest suffering. He was ever thus, slow to grasp the hand reached out to him through the darkness.

God touched the troubled waters of his soul by sending a remembrance of Jarvis's encounter with the Englishmen. Daniels seized upon it like a drowning man upon a straw.

Any distraction from self was infinite relief. After his manner he threw his whole soul into the project, and would suffer no delay. He told Jarvis he had decided to return to England without giving him any reason for his sudden purpose. That night they set out for London.

XXVII.

THE MISSING LINK.

Mathew Jennings sat in his comfortable inner office intent upon a difficult case in Chancery. On this particular day he was not at leisure to any but his regular patrons. Such was the order given to James, the footman. When Daniels accompanied by Jarvis, entered the reception room about 9 o'clock, he was both disappointed and indignant. Slipping a half-crown into the servant's hand he said:

"Go tell Mr. Jennings that two American gentlemen desire to see him on very important business at once, before leaving for the continent."

James pocketed the money with a sly wink, willing enough to brave his master's wrath for the shining silver. Directly the door opened and the portly, rotund figure of Mr. Jennings squeezed through. His usually round, ruddy, good-natured face, crowned with short, stubby, iron-gray hair, was drawn down to the proper ceremonial gravity, while his keen eyes shot harmless lightning at the intruders. He said in his most pompous manner, taking out his watch:

"Gentlemen, I can spare you but ten minutes; have an exceedingly difficult case on hands and must beg you to be brief and——bless my soul; Chilton, my boy?" catching a glimpse of Jarvis for the first time. "I always said you'd turn up some time and so did the old Earl, although 'my lady'—No. 2—insisted upon the regulation mourning and privately circulated that young Lord George was the only living heir. And so you've come back at last. You have not changed a bit in the face—only gained the maturity which twenty-five additional years would naturally bring to any one; but you are too gray for a man in his prime—much grayer, I swear, than you would have been had you stayed at home and lived at your ease, eh, my boy?"

Jarvis was struck dumb with amazement. Daniels spoke for him.

"Mr. Jennings, I will be brief and——"

"Brevity be hanged! Come back here into my sanctum where we will be undisturbed; I want to hear all about Chilton's wanderings. James, admit no one."

"I was about to say," continued Daniels, "that when in London a few days ago, I saw your advertisement in the London Times, and the clause which refers to Lord Chilton having registered on a certain ship under the name of Samuel Jarvis, first attracted my attention. That is the name of my friend here."

"Exactly."

"We went direct to Florence. There he was taken by the Earl of Bascombe to be the veritable Lord Chilton."

"To be sure; Bascombe was an old college chum."

"And yet my friend insists that he is not a lord and that he never was in England in his life, only as we passed through it a week ago."

Here the old solicitor's eyes gleamed angrily.

"The devil! why do you play the hang-dog any longer, Chilton? Why don't you walk up like a man and claim what rightfully belongs to you! I promised the old Earl on his deathbed that I would never withdraw that advertisement till I had positive proof of your death, and I have kept my word. You dishonor your family same by continuing longer to practice your strange freak."

By this time Jarvis had found his tongue. "There is a mistake somewhere—I do not understand—but when you hear the few facts, which comprise my life, perhaps you will be satisfied. Twenty-five years ago I was born at sea on a ship bound for New York. I don't know anything of my parents, except that they both died of a fever on the passage over. I was taken a helpless infant by one of the ship's crew to his own home and cared for, after a fashion, till I was old enough to be bound to the factory where I spent most of my life. Eight years ago I entered the employ of this gentleman. That is all I know of myself or my ancestors." The solicitor's face wore a baffled, perplexed look, which now disappeared as he leaned eagerly forward and said:

"Wait a minute! you say you were born on a ship at sea. Do you know the name of that vessel?"

"No, sir."

"Have you no keepsakes or mementoes of your parents?"

"Only a small picture of my father and my mother's little bible, which I always carry here next to my heart."

The old man fairly sprang to his feet despite rheumatic twinges with which he was greatly troubled, and almost snatched them from Jarvis' hands. The portrait was taken on ivory and set with rubies and pearls—a small fortune in themselves. At the top was the Chilton "coat of arms" and at the bottom "my lord's" monogram. Looking at the portrait and the man patiently waiting, one could not doubt for a moment that they were father and son; only the order seemed reversed. Our hero looked to be the father of his own father. On the fly-leaf of the bible was written:

"To Margaret, from her husband." And under the record of births was traced by the same hand:

"Born in mid-ocean in the ship City of Flanders, July—, 18—

"SAMUEL JARVIS."

Beneath was affixed the Chilton monogram.

"You need no other proofs than these, my boy!" holding up exultingly the treasured relics. "They are your passport to the English peerage and to the possession of one of the finest landed estates in the British dominions.

"There's Dunraven Castle in the Highlands, comprising a thousand acres of park—woodland, hunting-grounds, gardens and a magnificent castle full of old heir-looms, family portraits and family plate—a delightful summer residence. Then Chilton Place is a superb country-seat in the suburbs, which belonged to your father, and where he spent much of his time. The town-house is a palatial mansion in the most fashionable quarter of London, where 'my lady' spends her winters. She is absent in the Highlands, and will not return for some weeks yet. Besides a fine rental roll, there stands to your credit in the Bank of England the sum of £500,000. These with the titles are entailed upon the eldest son of the line, failing which they go to the next male of kin. 'My lady' has her dowry in her own right. You have now only to take your place as the rightful Earl of Dunraven. I welcome you—my boy! in the name of your dead grandfather. Why did your father leave England? A mad freak my boy! nothing less, and a fatal one, too, it proved; for it broke his mother's heart, and he never lived to reach the 'Arcadia' of his dreams.

"Ah, me! What a brilliant career was open to him! He was a wonderful, natural orator, and had he taken his seat in the House of Lords, he would have electrified Parliament with his eloquence and been the greatest leader of his day.

"He was betrothed from a child to lady Bertha, the queenly daughter of his father's dearest friend; but in an evil hour he fell madly in love with pretty Margaret Valance, the daughter of his father's agent. She was a sweet, modest, bewitching thing, only about fifteen. He married her clandestinely and took her to Chilton Place. The old Earl was not long in finding out how matters stood; he stormed and raved to no purpose. Finally he changed his tactics and plead with him not to dishonor the family name, but to put her away by divorce, and promised to settle upon her a handsome fortune. This your father flatly refused to do. The old Earl was proud of his boy, an only child too, and still hoped he would rue his folly and come to terms. Time passed. It came to his ears that Margaret was soon to be a mother. Then his wrath knew no bounds. Early one morning he called for me to accompany him to Chilton Place. I knew the crisis had come, and strove to soften his anger, but he would not listen to me.

"The Earl did not mince matters. He left him but one choice, either to get a divorce, providing handsomely for the wife and child, or to be disinherited. Chilton's eyes blazed to a white heat, and his form seemed to tower with majesty. He had a way of drawing himself up that was peculiar to him and very impressive, giving one the idea of immense power and strength. An old Earl far back in the line was remarkable for the same traits. Bred in the bone, you see. The poor child-wife plead with him between her sobs to leave her and not bring ruin upon himself. He only drew her closer to him, and, looking his father straight in the eyes, told him to do his worst; that not for the wealth of England would he do so dastardly a thing. Then, half-carrying his fainting wife, he strode from the room. The 'City of Flanders' lay at the docks ready to sail at midnight. They took passage, and that was the last we ever heard of them. The ship and crew were lost off the Irish coast on her return trip. That was twenty-five years ago last summer. Lady Dunraven never recovered from the shock, but died about a year afterward of a broken heart. The old Earl had the pride of his race and held his head high; no one dared mention his son's name to him, but he would talk freely of him to me. I could see that he grieved after him continually. As the estate was entailed he could not have carried his threat into execution; he knew that as well as I did, but only intended to frighten him in obeying his wishes. Chilton ought to have known better, but in the few hours remaining after the interview, he was in too much trouble, poor boy, to consider the legality of the case. The Earl never gave up, but that some time he would return, and he kept detectives on both sides of the water employed searching for him, but could never get any clue. Ten years after Chilton's disappearance he married his son's betrothed, Lady Bertha, and in course of time a son was born to them—Lord George, now about fifteen. Lady Bertha had never forgiven her lover's desertion, and after the birth of her son some evil spirit seemed to possess her. She dispatched a confidential servant secretly to New Orleans, and in course of time there came addressed to the Earl a paper from that city containing the notice of the sad death of Lord Chilton, of Chilton Place, England. Lord and Lady Chilton, daughter and nurse, had arrived recently in that city and registered at a certain hotel. Shortly after the lady and daughter were stricken with yellow fever and died within a few days of each other. Lord Chilton in despair had shot himself through the head and was found in a dying condition. He also received the sworn statements of the two attending physicians. Lady Bertha put on mourning and made a great show of grief. There was nothing in the paper or the statements that did not seem plausible enough, but somehow I was suspicious of her and doubted their genuiness. The old Earl believed them, however, and it nearly killed him. His life was despaired of for months, and it was not till a year afterward that he began to look at all like himself. Then he came to me one day and said:

"'Jennings! I want you to start tomorrow for New Orleans and bring back Chilton—his wife and child,' after an effort which I knew cost him much. 'They must be buried in the family vault with all due honors. Then I am on my reparation I can now make my dead boy.'

"There were tears in his eyes and his voice trembled. Well, I started, but all the long tedious journey I had a presentiment that it was a wild goose chase. I found that no such persons had ever registered at that hotel, and the proprietor of the paper, after assuring him that I would not prosecute him if he told the truth, confessed to being paid a bribe of £1,000 by a certain party representing Lady Dunraven to publish the extract furnished him by said party. The statements of the two physicians were forgeries. Lady Dunraven in some way found out that I had gone to America, and at once suspected my errand. She suddenly fell into ill health; her physician ordered a year's travel on the continent. She made haste to take his advice, and was accompanied, you may be sure, by her confidential servant. I had taken the precaution to bring back the necessary proofs of her damnable scheme. When I laid them before the old Earl he hobbled to his feet and threw his arms around my neck, crying and laughing like some hysterical woman. I had expected a very different scene, and was consequently somewhat astonished. Well, he was so overjoyed to find the statements false that he forgave 'my lady' right away, and wrote her to that effect, stipulating, however, that Lord George should assume no title till I had the legal proof of his brother's death. As long as he lived the Earl held her to that compact, but since his death five years ago the young Lord has assumed both titles under her direction. However, I have always given him his proper title much to the disgust of her ladyship. On his deathbed the Earl laid my hand upon the Bible and made me swear that I would put the advertisement you saw in all leading papers, and never withdraw it till I had found Chilton, or proof of his death. I can now order its withdrawal. I will communicate at once with her ladyship and inform her of your arrival and the absolute proofs of your identity. Perhaps she will not desire to return to London this season."

"Not so fast, please," said Jarvis. "Do not inform Lady Dunraven till I see you again. The startling revelation you make involves grave questions which I must have time to consider. If the hour suits you we will meet you here at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning."

"Certainly. As to the time suit your own convenience. But pray, dine with me to-night."

The gentlemen excused themselves and withdrew. When they had reached their hotel Jarvis went direct to his room, saying simply:

"Excuse me, sir; I wish to be alone."

Daniels asked no questions; he knew what that alone meant—a close and intimate communion with Him, who sitteth in kingly majesty, yet was once a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Could he err when He, who knows the end from the beginning, held his hand in close brotherhood. Whatever might be the decision arrived at, after a thorough review of the situation, which he knew he would make prayerfully upon his knees, Jarvis would be upheld by an inner consciousness of rectitude of purpose on his part, and a sweet, abiding peace, the natural outgrowth of an implicit faith and trust in that Providence, which numbers the hairs of our head and cares even for the sparrows's fall.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Superiority of Talmage Over Darwin.

A NEW EXPLANATION OF BLAINE'S DEFEAT

Hard Times a Fiction—The Craze for Blonde Heads—Art in the Metropolis—Faithless Brides and Grooms—Emma Nevada's Success.

Special Correspondence of the TIMES.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.

It is fortunate for New York that it has such a neighbor as Brooklyn, for the City of Churches acts as a political and religious balance-wheel to us benighted sinners on this side of the river, and keeps us metaphorically up to standard time. New York cannot be called strictly orthodox. Free thinking and loose scientific notions flourish like a green bay tree, and if you happen to mention such a thing as a miracle these new-fledged philosophers say, with Huxley and Darwin, "Prove it." But as I remarked at the beginning, New York is fortunate in lying so near to Brooklyn, and Brooklyn is fortunate in possessing two such enterprising and energetic ministers as Justin D. Fulton and De Witt Talmage. If the Republicans had only followed Fulton's advice Blaine would have been President to-day, while Talmage knocked the underpinning from Darwin, Huxley, Herbert Spencer and Tyndall, and proved satisfactorily to himself that they were nothing but a set of presuming ignoramuses, who were playing upon the credulity of a confiding world. It is lucky for Darwin that he died before he was so completely squelched by Talmage. You will see at a glance the superiority of Talmage. Darwin was only a dreamer who drew his conclusions from a lot of abstruse and disconnected facts, but Talmage knows exactly how the thing was done and as a matter of course, it is much more satisfactory to have the evidence of a man that knows like Talmage than fellows who only think they know, like Huxley, Darwin, Spencer and Tyndall. The old Mosaic account of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, is good enough for Talmage; he don't want to go back to the time when Adam's great, great, great, great, grandfather sat up on the top of a seventy-foot telegraph pole cracking cocoanuts for his breakfast, or munching bananas or guavas for his supper.

NO RING TAILED MONKEY

for Talmage. It is much easier for Talmage to believe that Eve was manufactured out of a rib, than that she was evoluted from a Pollywog. At any rate he settled Darwin's hash, and you need not expect to hear of him again. Great man, great man, Talmage.

Fulton holds out at the Tabernacle, otherwise known among the profane as the Rink. It is one of the largest buildings in Brooklyn. It was here that the Evangelists Moody and Sankey sowed their gospel seed about ten years ago; seed which, I regret to say, was not sown on fallow ground, but which fell among the rocks and was devoured by the fowls of the air, for scarcely a single shoot remains to mark the passage of the Evangelists. After that the Rink served the unrighteous for walking matches and boxing matches, profane dances and other wicked doings. At last it was rescued from the clutches of Satan by Brother Fulton, and for the last four years he has been having a hand-to-hand fight with the world, the flesh and the d—l. Brother Fulton believes with the Rev. Dr. Burchard that the Democratic party is the party of Rum, Romanism and Rebellion, and he feels assured that if Brother Blaine had only hailed Dr. Burchard's flag to his mast-head he would have left Jersey Cleveland to the quiet seclusion of our capital at Albany, and James G. Blaine would have made a triumphant march on the White House in the City of Washington. When will our so-called statesmen learn wisdom? Here was Blaine in Brooklyn; he might have well have called on Fulton as not, and Fulton could have told him just how to win, but with unpardonable stupidity he did not call on Fulton, and behold the result: he got left; served him right. It will be a warning to the next Pr sidential candidate!

HARD TIMES.

Taking up the papers you hear the cry of hard times. It is a difficult thing to realize it as you walk through the great thoroughfares of New York and Brooklyn. Hardly in the memory of living men has there been such costly extravagance in dress. The wives of mechanics and tradesmen dress better to-day than a fine lady could dress forty years ago. Walk along the west side of Broadway or through 14th or 23d streets on any pleasant afternoon, and among the thousands you pass, representing every grade of society, it is rare to meet a poorly dressed woman. This is more particularly noticeable at four o'clock in the afternoon, when the down town factories are turning out their thousands from the dense hives in the lower part of the city, but among them all it is rare to see a poorly dressed woman. Of course there are some extraordinary persons who especially desire to make themselves conspicuous, but this is like any other disease and has to be borne with equanimity.

The prevailing styles of goods are marvels of beauty, and in the general make-up of them there is a most exquisite taste worthy of all commendation. When we remember the flaunting abominations of four or five years ago we feel that we have reason to thank Providence to have reached our present vantage ground. Taste has vastly improved; the dresses that cost some four or five dollars a yard no longer do the work appointed for the city scavengers.

THE CRAZE FOR BLONDE HEADS.

The craze for blonde heads has gone out of fashion and our sensible women coming back to their natural colors, though I confess it looks odd to see one-half of a woman's hair a bright golden yellow and the portion next her head of a very respectable chestnut, but as it tells of returning common sense we feel like forgiving one of the most unpardonable follies of which our sisters have been guilty—since Eve went apple hunting. I was talking with a gentleman largely engaged in business—a man who had traveled extensively and knew the world, and he remarked, if a man wants anything that is to be found on the face of the earth he can get it in this city. This may seem like a bold assertion, but we have grown wonderfully. As you pass along the streets in the stores you see the richest of oriental hangings, tapestries, laces and all sorts of beautiful and costly goods, bronzes, elegant knic-nacks, articles of virtu and ornament, such as a few years ago could only be found in Paris, London, Berlin or Vienna. It was a rare thing for a foreign artist of reputation to send a picture across the water, and now they come by thousands, many indifferent canvases finding ready purchasers among the over credulous Yankees.

ART IN NEW YORK.

A number of colossal fortunes have been piled up among us within the past twenty years. It goes for saying that not a single one of our newly-fledged millionaires knew the difference between a Raphael or a Rubens, or a John Smith, or a Tom Brown. The late Mr. Stewart gave $20,000 for Rosa Bonheur's Horse Fair, and he knew as much about its artistic merit as one of the horses in the picture. A capital judge of linens and calicoes, well versed in silks and cloths, besides being something of a classical scholar, he knew no more about pictures than a bird carrier. Yet he built a fine gallery which nobody is allowed to enter, and he imprisoned within its brick walls three hundred thousand dollars worth of fine pictures which might just as well be in the catacombs of Egypt as in his white marble palace on the Fifth Avenue.

A very different man was Marshall A. Roberts. He was a very rich man and one who knew the value of a dollar as well as any man in the city, but he was a broad guage man of liberal principles and exquisite taste, and he was blest with a wife just as good as himself, and he was willing that the millions of the poor should share the blessings of his abundance. First he threw his magnificent picture gallery open to aid some charitable institution, and finally he admitted the public on stated days, and this was kept up almost to the day of death. It was an inestimable boon to the lovers of art and one that will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Vanderbilt did something of the kind last winter, and the public are in hopes that he will not be weary of well-doing, but with the return of frost will give them another peep at those famous pictures which only a millionaire like himself could ever have brought to this side of the Atlantic. Jay Gould has some pictures but no one ever sees them.

FAITHLESS BRIDES AND RECREANT GROOMS.

What a year this has been for jiltings. I have before me a list of twenty brides and grooms who were deserted in the last year at the altar's foot. Four faithless brides and sixteen recreant grooms. Only the other night our fashionable colored society was moved to its innermost depths by the desertion of one of the most enchanting sable belles in the city. Like many other romantic young maidens she had fixed her affections on a coachman. (What in Jerusalem is there about these coachmen?) Well this particular John walked off with his young lady's affections as if he had been driving his own horse). The wedding day was fixed, the friends were invited, the feast was prepared, the minister was on hand, the bride stood decked in orange blossoms, but the groom came not. When he should have been promising to love, honor and cherish, this faithless groom was grooming his horses at a stable on Clinton avenue. After waiting a long time the bride went off into hysterics, the minister went without his fee, the bridal party went without their supper, and the doughnuts, wedding cake and charlotte russe remain unconsumed to this day. This coachman business ought to be played out, though from present appearances Mrs. Hinkamp Morrissini may turn her escapade with her coachman into golden ducats. It is not near so romantic to say that she is married to a ticket-taker as a coachman, but before she finishes her concert tour she will find that the fellow who looks out for the ticket box is a much more important person than the fellow who sits on the coach box.

I have often remarked that whenever I want a point I have to go to Brooklyn for it. The latest is the robbery of the Kings County Penitentiary. Some thieves broke in and carried off the cash. If you have any prisons out your way keep an eye on them or some daring burglar may run away with the cells and the keepers.

The success of the new operatic star, Miss Emma Nevada, was so pronounced that we shall have no further occasion to import foreign singers. Each appearance has been a triumph never before accorded to an American singer. She is so good as she is talented, and America may well be proud of her new star.

ART IN LOS ANGELES.

A Visit to the Studio of Mrs. L. Jaynes Putnam.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever." The eye loves beauty, and the human soul hungers for it. This sentiment of admiration for the beautiful, whether it be in nature or in art, is kindred with the divine. It enlarges the soul. It purifies it, it educates it. This appreciation of the beautiful, forms one of the distinctive differences between savage barbarism and an enlighted civilization. To all the fine harmonies of color, the grandeur of outline, the charms of light and shade the eye of the savage is blind. To the poetry of nature his ear is deaf. The eloquence of its language he cannot interpret. The artist power in him is dead or sleeping.

What beauty has art lent to Rome. Through all the dim shadows of the centuries its glories shine lighting the darkness. Munich, with its grand galleries is a Mecca where the disciple of art lovingly lingers and worships. And so with every city where Art has her temples the lovers of the beautiful are numerous and refined. Therefore it is desirable for any city, when once its prosperity and growth is fully established, than that art should lend its attractions and become an element of its progress.

The TIMES has already noted the gratifying advancement of Los Angeles in relation to art, and it is a pleasant task to chronicle the multiplication of its studios and the really commendable work of its artists.

Some days ago the writer dropped into the pleasant studio of in the Nadeau block, and passed a pleasant hour in the study of the various productions of her brush which adorned the walls. Mrs. Putnam has been in the city only a few weeks, but is already well established, and already commands a large patronage. She also has a class of pupils, and has received quite a number of orders for pictures.

Among the pictures worthy of note was one representing a large basket of peaches which had been overturned, the tempting fruit lying in a pile upon the ground. The downy softness and rich natural color was correctly portrayed by the artist. It was a charming counterfeit of nature. Another equally well executed design was a companion piece—a basket of luscious grapes, looking so juicy and transparent as if the clusters had just been taken from the vines.

There was also the "Old-fashioned kitchen," with the traditional cat upon the hearth and the ancient iron pot boiling above the glowing fire. It made one think of pioneer days—the days of long ago, when the old stock ticked contentedly upon the wall and told the minutes of simple, quiet lives in the country.

Among the quaint pictures was one "Blowing the dinner horn." A little bare-footed and bare headed boy, in his shirt-sleeves, sits upon the brown bars in front of the farm-house, the horn pressed to his lips, and his eyes looking over the wide, green field, touched with the shadows from the light summer clouds. The trees suggest the leafy beauty of June, but the happy boy sitting astride the bars is the central figure of the story which the artist tells.

Upon the walls also are some finely executed Italian peasant scenes, copies from Cimaglia, and some Oriental views—superb studies. The Arab, crossing the wide and sandy reaches of Sahara, has dismounted from his camel, and in the cool shadow of a stately palm has spread his mat and sitting upon it has drawn off his sandals. No living thing beside him, but his patient camel is seen in all the broad perspective of the picture.

There is an attractive companion piece, representing the journey ended, and two figures stand beside the flowing waters of the Nile trying to coax an obstinate donkey into the waiting barge. The faces are full of character, and finely colored. In the distance are the mountains, and over all a look of tropical stillness and heat. An offer of a thousand dollars has been refused by the artist for these pictures.

Mrs. Putnam pursued her studies in New York city. In her preliminary course she gave three years to crayon and object drawing. She has some fine studies in crayon, but the majority of her studies are in oil. She studied with Knubsen, so well known to the artist-world. She is delighted with Los Angeles, the charms of its climate and the beauty of its surroundings, and proposes to make her home in this city.

Nature here is full of inspiration for the artist, holding as it does the rugged grandeur of mountain height, the beauty of the hills, and the wide perspective of plains. Peculiarly noticeable are the cloud effects upon the mountain heights, working their wonderful transformations and making of these mighty ranges new creations every hour. Without doubt, California is to be the new Italy of art, and may we not hope that in the future Los Angeles may be its imperial city?

ON THE MOUNTAIN TOP.

Birdseye View of Riverside and Santa Ana Valley.

RIVERSIDE ORANGE-GROWERS IN COUNCIL

The Question of How to Dispose of Their Crop—Proposals Received from San Francisco and St. Paul—Organization of a Committee of Safety.

Correspondence of the TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, Cal., Dec. 8.—On Saturday last we were successful in scaling one of the mountains that engirt the Santa Ana Valley, and found an eminence that affords peculiar advantages for taking a birdseye view. Looking toward the North, Colton, eight miles distant, could be seen apparently resting at the base of the mountain of limestone. Seemingly but a few steps beyond, but in reality three miles further north, the trees, house-tops and steeples of San Bernardino rear their heads. The San Bernardino range bounds this valley on the north about ten miles from San Bernardino, and on one of these mountains, at an altitude of over 2,000 feet, is a large bare spot on the mountain side, which so closely resembles an Indian arrow head that it has become a landmark to the people of the valley, and is called the "Indian Arrow Head." The "Arrow Head" is clearly outlined even now, for it covers a space of more than eight acres in extent. Directly under it is a large white dot which we know to be the hotel at the Hot Springs. Northeast of this point and about one-quarter of the distance up the mountain-side, on a "bench," are some insignificant looking specks which are the homes of the colonists of Redlands. The roads in the valley look like yellow threads and appear to run into the mountains and stop. But that one extending south leads out to Temescal and down to Chino ranch. The one that runs east with a fork to the right would, if followed on the right, take you to Pinacarte, and the line running straight east into the mountains would bring you to Elsinore. To the west you would have a bright journey, for if you followed that thread you would reach Cucamonga, Ontario, Pomona and the fair metropolis of Southern California — Los Angeles. Immediately below us the stores and residences, the vineyards and great orange groves of Riverside are clustered. Green cypress hedges instead of fences separate the fields as they do in Germany, and as the city is symmetrically platted, is fair in its proportions, and the trees and vines are generally eqaidistant in the groves and vineyards, the harmony is remarkable, and from this eminence Riverside looks like a large and beautiful park. This comprehensive view enabling us to see the ranging mountains, some of them snow crowned, the distant towns and the oasis Riverside under us, presents in the bright warm sunlight a fine landscape. Yet while possessing interest as a picture it does not, in general terms, acquaint us with the devious ways of the people. To learn particulars we must leave this elevation and mingle among them.

Doing so we see a number of the orange growers of Riverside going into the Parish hall, and, joining them, find that a meeting is to be held to consider the feasibility of establishing a branch commission house here to handle the products of Riverside, and especially the orange crop. At 3:30 p. m. there are about fifty orange growers present, and the meeting is called to order. Mr. A Kieth is chairman, and W. A Spaulding secretary. Mr. G. W. Garcelon, of the committee appointed to correspond with commission houses and get proposals, submitted a report which embraced propositions made by Hilton, Hunt & Co., of San Francisco; Hemenway & Co., of St. Paul, Minn., and the Riverside Fruit Company, and Newberry, Majors & Co., of Riverside. These firms all demanded 10 per cent. of the receipts as commissions. Hilton, Hunt & Co could not handle Riverside oranges exclusively, but Hemenway & Co. and the others offered to make them a specialty. Both the St. Paul and San Francisco house desired that producers contract to sell them 25,000 and 50,000 boxes of oranges, providing the crop failed. The committee did not advise in favor of any house, but recommended that producers combine as much as possible so as to prevent competition among themselves.

The discussion which followed the adoption of the report was characterized by dissension at first marked and various that it soon became evident that no joint action would be taken. Several expressed themselves in favor of respective firms, and pledged themselves to sell to a particular house if others would join, but this proved ineffectual. The prevailing opinion was that if all should join and sell to one house it might bring the entire crop on the market at the same time—the most unfavorable, perhaps—and at the same place, and thus glut the market, besides giving the preferred house advantages which might not be used in the interest of sellers.

Mr. Bettner stated that he had written Mr. Gray, General Agent of the S. P. R. R. Co., asking what rates would be given for freight, and received a reply saying his letter was held under advisement, and inquiring what price producers were willing to pay. A voice, "How much will it bear?" Mr. Bettner said he answered they were willing to pay $150 a car. (This excited great laughter.) And Mr. Gray had replied, that price could not be thought of, but intimated that it would probably be $350 per car, the same as last year, but with reduced time for transportation—probably 9 days from Colton to St. Louis or Chicago.

Mr. Hemenway, senior member of the St. Paul firm, was called. He responded and said he could not say what prices they would pay, as that would depend upon the market. But he believed oranges could be sold for more in St. Paul than in any other market. Prices are generally higher there than in Chicago, because St. Paul is usually supplied from Chicago. His firm would make a specialty of Riverside oranges and other products, and would send men into towns to solicit orders and work up custom.

Judge Brown suggested that the oranges be packed by the car, every box bearing a trade mark, and in cities like Kansas City, St. Paul, and Chicago, have one house handle them. Might use the men spoken of here, but let it be controlled in Riverside. In reply to the question whether he would favor a joint stock company for this purpose, he said: "Yes, if all will join so as to have uniformity."

The plan of letting the Riverside Fruit Company do the business was then advocated. It was stated that they would handle them through W. T. Coleman & Co. of San Francisco. Senator Johnson hereupon remarked that "any man who wants to sell to the company (Riverside Fruit Co.) will, and those who want to sell to others will do so," and left, followed by a majority of those present, which practically put an end to the meeting. No vote was taken on any of the propositions, and after a little more talk, the meeting adjourned sine die.

Stopping at the St. George Hotel on the way down street we were handed a small dodger which contained a request that the citizens of Riverside assemble to-night, December 6, in Judge Conway's office to organize a committee of safety, and ended with these words: "Too many horse thieves around." Visions of vigilantes lynch law, horse thieves hanging high, wounded sheriffs, and bullets flying thick and fast, crowded up and suggested a sensation to write up. No one seemed to know anything about the matter, however. But when the meeting was called to order among the crowd. There were thirty men present and about twenty-five of them were ranchers who are horse owners and live on the outskirts of the settlement. One of the company acted as spokesman and called the meeting to order and stated that the object was to organize a Committee of Safety, because so many horses were being stolen that it was suspected that the place was infested by the same gang of horse-thieves who operated around here four years ago. Those present were then called on to state their grievances, and it appeared from the statements of several who are victims that within a very recent period two saddles and five horses had disappeared under suspicious circumstances. One man's horse had vanished the preceding night. A few who have had experience in safety committees, or, in other words, as Vigilantes, were called upon to explain the modus operandi of dealing with horse-thieves. One said the best way was to appoint a Captain and have the others obey his orders, as this saved the county the expense of lawsuits, and enabled them to work effectively. The suggestion was acted upon and a committee appointed to draft rules soon brought in the following: "A committee of five be appointed to take action in any case that may come before them; that said committee appoint one of their number captain; that the captain appoint two lieutenants, and that members of the association agree to follow all orders that they may receive from the captain." They then held a secret meeting and organized, appointed officers, levied assessments and made arrangements for beginning work. This movement is ominous, the men are deeply in earnest, as they feel that unless they proceed vigorously their horses will be run off and they left to make terms with the thieves.

Four years ago a gang of Mexicans—native Californians—having a thorough knowledge of the country around here, utilized the facilities which it offers for this business. Their system was to run a horse off and hide it in some cañon in the mountains, and if a sufficiently large reward was offered for its return, then some Mexican belonging to the gang would start out and "find" the horse for the owner. But if the inducement was lacking they would run the horses through passes in the mountains and down into Mexico and sell them. Or sometimes they would meet a part of the gang that operated in Arizona and other places east of the range and exchange horses with them and bring those they received here to sell. It is believed that this same gang is at work now. A member of the Committee of Safety said that when hunting for his horses a few days ago he struck a place up the Santa Ana river where some Mexicans had quite a band of horses. He thinks the place must be a rendezvous, and if the horses should be driven up and a description taken of them they might be found to be horses that were advertised for in places east of the mountains.

Later in the evening we met Mr. E. R. Skelley, resident member of the firm of Griffin & Skelley, wholesale shippers of Riverside fruits. He said that he had just shipped a box of oranges to Mike De Young of the San Francisco Chronicle, and that it was the first shipped from Riverside this season. In reply to a question, he stated that he considered 150,000 boxes a low estimate of the crop of oranges here this year. The crop, he said, is fine, the oranges being bright colored, thin skinned, free from specks, and of about the right size for dealers. The Navels especially are fine and will run 150 to the box, while the seedlings are quite small and will run from 200 to 300 oranges per box. The skin of the seedlings this year is as thin as that of the pulasan, or Rhode Island Greening, while last year they were thick skinned and so large that dealers could not handle them with profit. He intends shipping 16 boxes of oranges to San Francisco Monday, but added that were anripe and have not the sweet flavor of Riverside oranges. He was afraid that this shipment was not calculated to enhance the reputation of Riverside, which Mr. Skelley answered by saying that there was a demand for these, and the reputation of Riverside oranges is now well established to suffer from this, and when their fruit and regular shipments are made they will speak for themselves. He opined that strong shipments will be made in January and February, but that the bulk of the crop will be left on the trees till March and then shipped East. C. W. B.

Advice to Prohibitionists.

To the Editor of the Times—SIR: I saw in the MIRROR an article headed "Do I Stand Alone?" and now, in the WAVE, a reply to that article by J. W. Potts, wherein he (Potts) claims to be an old line Republican and a temperance man and having done much good for the cause, etc. Now, I wish to make a suggestion or two to my temperance friends, or, rather, Prohibition friends, and to commence with I wish it understood that I am and ever have been a strict and consistent temperance man; but in the policy to abuse old and tried friends to get a new and untried one I do not. Yet that is the course the Prohibitionist are and have been taking ever since the last political campaign began up to the present hour.

Would it not be better, as well as policy, to treat the Republicans as friends rather than to treat them as enemies, for well you all know that nine-tenths of your number came from the Republican party, for who ever heard of a temperance mass or suggestion from the old Democratic party? Then, I ask, is it consistent to abuse to the very party that gave you your life as a party? To-day the nation owes to the Republican party its existence. To-day the cause of temperance owes all that has been done for the cause to the Republican party. Look and see what are the statistics of the States that voted no license.

Prohibitionists are taking the same course that the little faction of Christian fanatics are taking. They call themselves the Holiness Band, and they are going from house to house and from street to street, and like two-headed snakes, slip in the back door and tell the ministers of simple, quiet lives in the country. Among the quaint pictures was one "Blowing the dinner horn." A little bare-footed and bare headed boy, in his shirt-sleeves, sits upon the brown bars in front of the farm-house, the horn pressed to his lips, and his eyes looking over the wide, green field, touched with the shadows from the light summer clouds. Poultry Raising—How to Feed Hens—The Superiority of the Modern Hen Defined.

On Feeding Hens.

Rural Press.]

EDITORS PRESS:—There is no subject connected with poultry raising of more vital importance than how to feed hens. Not only is more light needed, but all we can get, and perhaps more, is requisite to the best results in this field.

No matter how excellent the variety of chickens, their egg record will not be satisfactory unless a regular and judicious system of feeding is maintained. I was once assured by a lady in Petaluma, who kept a dozen brown Leghorns in her back yard, that they were a failure as layers, and that she had decided to change to some other variety. I assured her that there were no better layers known than the brown Leghorns, and that her failure with them must result from a wrong method of feeding, as her hens had ample range and were few in number. But when she told me that she fed them all the table refuse, besides all the wheat they would eat, and then took the trouble to pound up burned bones for them, and still they would not lay, I was greatly puzzled. And I am puzzled about that case still. But I am nevertheless satisfied that there was something wrong somewhere. Either age, or vermin, or unseasonable moulting or some other condition was wrong. For I am absolutely sure that the egg machinery of a Leghorn, either brown or white, runs wonderfully when everything is right.

Another case, opposite in all respects, has puzzled me since, though not as much. A neighbor in Napa who has a flock of two dozen Plymouth Rocks, declared to me with the utmost assurance that he fed his hens nothing but whole corn, and that it was just astonishing the way they shelled out the eggs, and he was satisfied that corn was the best thing to feed a laying hen. Of course he was wrong, and would fall three times out of four on a corn diet alone. Wm. Niles, of Los Angeles, says that corn is unfit for hens, and that though they prefer it before all other food yet they should never be allowed to have it. And again I say, of course he is wrong, for he is on the opposite extreme. The truth will be found to lie between the statements of the two men mentioned, and yet not midway between, for corn one-half the time is altogether too much corn for laying hens. Corn is too heating in summer, and it is too fattening as an egg producing food.

But for young roosters and for fattening old hens for market, a liberal use of corn may answer; but even then it should be ground or cracked, and fed at night only.

The best one thing for laying hens is pure wheat; not screenings, filled with foul and poisonous seeds of weeds, but pure, standard milling wheat. Such grain is none too good, and the best is the cheapest.

But no one thing is enough to feed a laying hen. Bread is the best one thing a man can eat, but "man shall not live by bread alone." He wants meat and vegetables, and so does a hen. Scrub hens may get along on scrub fare, but they will answer the demands of none but scrub people. The modern hen—the real "hen of the period"—must be remunerative, in beauty and utility, from the old "dung hill fowl," as a blooded horse is removed from a mustang or a half-breed "plug."

A good rule for evening feeding is this: Monday, wheat; Tuesday, corn; Wednesday, wheat; Thursday, oats; Friday, wheat; Saturday, soaked barley; Sunday, buckwheat or Egyptian corn. The morning feed should be always ground, often cooked, and rather elaborate and diversified. But I will speak of this next time.

Sheep and Land.

Rural Press.]

EDITORS PRESS: Every little while we see, in the agricultural papers, remarks upon the great value of sheep to the land. Now, it may be true that sheep are beneficial in the East, but here in California they are a curse to the land. More than all other causes combined, have they ruined much of our pasture grounds, caused deep gullys to wash in our hills, and made the best of the top soil of our hills run off into the ocean and be practically lost. How is this done? The answer is plain. Sheep travel in compact bands, usually containing from one to three thousand. Under the care of a herder, they go from their corral over the hills, trampling the soil as hard as a road with their thousands of hoofs, and eating the ground as bare as a floor. Many of the seeds of such valuable plants as the burr-clover, are thus entirely ceased from growing in large sections, and I can show you hundreds of hills here, where the pasturage was once very fine, that now grow only poor and almost valueless plants. Put on the ground when it is wet, the sheep beat the whole range down like a road, and the next rain that comes runs off over the ground as though it were the roof of a house. Treated this way year after year, soil and seeds both lose their vitality, the rich humus is swept away by the rains, and the land has all the evils of a succession of dry years.

This county is now much cut up by barrancos, or deep gulleys, washed in the soil. Where the water formerly spread over the whole land, it is now confined to a narrow channel, which it tears deeper and deeper each successive season. Between my cabin and the town of San Buenaventura there are ten of these barrancos in the course of 12 miles. Every one of these is of recent formation, early settlers remembering when there was not one. Most of these barrancos follow the trails which lead from the river to the hills, and were made by the water washing these trails deeper. Go in the hills, and you see the deep, well-defined trails cut by the sheep as they wind up and down the hills. Walk there during a rain, and you will see that each trail has become a water course, bearing away the best of the soil in its muddy water, and deepening the channel until there is a deep cut in the loose soil. Come again, after one winter of heavy rains, and there is a barrance which will always remain as a memorial of the blessed (?) sheep.

On the mountains they destroy the young trees, and the ground left bare melts down to the rocks and floods the valleys below whenever an unusual rain comes.

I have alluded but briefly to a few of the curses the sheep are putting upon our land, but enough has been said, I hope, to draw the attention of the thoughtful to the damage sheep are causing. I have not spoken of the piratical sheep-owner trampling the small farmer in his ruthless march, eating up the spiarists scattered over the county; stealing pasture here and eating up crops there, and causing the owners of the sheep to be regarded by settlers as their natural enemies. These are, perhaps, foreign to the subject; but that sheep have damaged this county thrice what they have benefited it no close observer can deny. Many of our best large ranches, worth thousands of dollars, would have now been divided up among hundreds of families, had it not been for the sheep. Don't talk about the value of sheep in destroying weeds. They will scatter more weeds, and worse ones about a country than any other animal. Great patches of boarhound, which is almost ineradicable, mark the trail of the sheep in this county, not to speak of fox-tail grass and other nuisances.

As they farm sheep in California, they are a curse to the country, and people will see this more plainly the longer the sheep are permitted to run over our hills. C. M. DRAKE.

HOUSE AND HOME.

Susan Sunshine's House and Home Papers.

My little daughter has just gone wild over a book which she found in the library yesterday entitled "Six Little Cooks." It is a perfect Aladdin's Lamp to her, revealing wonderful things in the science of cookery, and making plain the mystery which creates so many dishes "tempting to the sight and good for food." Satisfied that rest and quiet would not be mine till she had carte blanche to test their excellence, I brought out stores of eggs, sugar, butter, flour and spices, spoke the "open sesame" which gave her access to the kitchen, and well aproned, and with sleeves rolled up to the elbows, we commenced the onslaught.

Popovers.—We will try these first, said I; they will be delicious I am sure. And so those were made in this way: One cup of flour, one of milk, one egg, a piece of butter the size of a walnut, a pinch of salt. They were tempting, and almost melted in the mouth like a flake of snow in the sunshine.

Sponge Cake—So bright and golden with sponge-like cells—who doesn't enjoy it? Turning over the pages of the little volume, we came across the following recipe, which the children pronounced "delectable." "Ten eggs, three cups flour, three of sugar, piece and rind of one lemon, half a teacupful of cold water. Beat the eggs separately, then add sugar and lemon to the yolks, then the whites, and lastly sift in the flour. A teaspoonful of baking powder is thought by many to be an improvement."

While we were busy as cooks we thought we would try the following choice and inexpensive article for desert, which is good and substantial and not a rich and indigestible conglomeration of sweets. It is the lemon pie of Yankeeland, and the recipe came from Connecticut—the land of steady habits and wooden nutmegs: "Dissolve one tablespoonful of corn starch in a little water, and pour on it a cup of boiling water. When it boils up pour it on a cup of sugar and a tablespoonful of butter. When cool add one egg and the yolk of another, well beaten, and the peel and juice of a lemon. Put in a pie-plate lined with paste, and bake. When done, spread over the top the white of an egg beaten up with sugar, and let it stand in the oven a few minutes."

I rode out to see a friend the other day. I found her in her garden busy with her flowers. There was a green lawn beyond them covered with a thick-set growth of Sandwich Island grass. She had a bed of sweet-scented geraniums by the side of fragrant heliotrope. Some callas were almost ready to blossom. The air was delicious per-fume. We visited out of doors for a while, and then went into her pleasant parlor. It is a delightful room, and yet it is not expensively furnished. There are inside shutters, over which fall delicate draperies of lace. The walls are hung with choice pictures, and here and there are dainty bric-a-brac which gives tone and character and expression to the room. There are some of Rogers' beautiful statuary. They are like poems some of them, and some of them are a life history. The vases are full of flowers, and a faint perfume fills the room. Easy chairs stand carelessly in their places, and on the white matting beautiful rugs are laid. Some of them are like glowing clouds of color, others are like the soft, fleecy clouds of June. They make one think of a June morning. After a while we went out to tea. Her tea biscuits were excellent. They were made in this way: Two eggs, one cup of sifted sugar, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one cup cream. Break the eggs into a bowl, beat well, adding the cream gradually, then the sugar and flour into which has been sifted the baking powder. Roll out and cut into biscuits. Bake in a quick oven.

What are we to think of that sorrow which gives itself to the study of effects and makes itself the slave of fashion—of the grief for those who have been laid away in their last quiet slumber that finds comfort in following fashion's caprices and foolish mandates? Our grief—the heart that truly loved them—raises its sorrow in silence and with no ostentatious badge of woe. But into this sacred domain fashion profanely enters and utters anew her edict. Her latest tyranny is as follows: "If a widow is ill enough to 'keep' her bed but well enough to see a friend—'a few real intimate friends'—she, if recently bereaved, reclines in black moiré silk sheets and pillows. The pillow cases are simply hemstitched to match the sheets. If she is recovering tone from a late grief, she receives in lavender embroidered with black and the coverlid may have a touch of yellow gold. If she contemplates second matrimony the lavender is embroidered with rose color and May apple green."

How much better to lay our dead away, discarding all this folly, treasuring them in our hearts, with their memory lifting us above the vanities of life, and surrounding us like a purer atmosphere. We may walk with them day by day through faith "beyond the gates," breathing a holier air and lingering on the heights above all worldliness, and blessed through tears.

There is no ministry so ennobling as sorrow if its mission be fulfilled; nothing that brings us so fully face to face with the sublimer meanings of life and its higher duties. We follow our friends to the verge of the silent land, and sometimes catch a gleam of its reflected glories upon their faces. They hear the rush of wings and the whisper of undying hope. The Divine love sheds its glory upon their passing as the gates swing open wide. Between us and the vast unseen we feel there is but the thinnest veil. The present recedes and the solemn realities of the unending future overshadow us. From all this shall we turn backward to the world, to its idle mockery of display and to the hollowness of fashionable vanity and folly? SUSAN SUNSHINE.

The "Solid South" for years during Democratic depression has stood like a great shackled giant unmovable in its purposes, the ally and friend of the national Democracy, always ready to aid and succor. By its powerful aid the national Democracy has achieved a great and crushing victory, and now in the selection, by the new President, of counsellors for the administration of the Government, the Solid South, which has stood so firmly and waited so patiently, will not be extravagant in its claim for places.

A Poem on the Happiest Bird of Spring.

LIFE IN THE ISLANDS OF BEHRING SEA.

Christmas Among the Aleuts—The Long Summer Days and Dreary, Stormy Winter.

Robert of Lincoln.

Within a leafy forest tree,
Sang a happy bird;
Never have you, I am sure,
Sweeter music heard.

All the squirrels stopped to listen,
And the ivy tendrils,
Floating in the sunshine fair
Of the summer skies.

Forgot, I think, to fly away,
For they floated down
And rested on the bird's wing,
Like a golden crown.

And the little black-eyed cricket
Sat upon the ground,
And the listening grasshopper
Uttered not a sound.

And the busy, cunning spider,
Weaving at his web,
Stopped right in the middle of a Shining silver thread.

"Who is this bird that's singing
In the forest tree?
And what is it he's saying?"
Buzzed the little bee.

Then she stopped and listened—
"Ah, I know him well!
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link—
Surely I can tell."

Robert of Lincoln, that's his name,
And just peep and see,
In the bough where he sits I know
There are one, two, three.

Dear little birds, in a small, round nest,
And his little mate,
Loving and sweet as bird can be,
Broods early and late

To keep the dear young birdies warm
While Bob-o'-link, you see,
Keeps her glad with his cheerful note,
Sitting there in his nice black coat,
Singing "Bob-o-link, Bob-o-link, that's My name.
And here's my darling little dame,
And my children three."

HOW HE ESCAPED.

The Strange Story of a Doctor's Personal Experience.

Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald.]

The Herald lays the following statement before its readers with the assurance that it is undoubtedly true in every particular. The writer is a well and widely known citizen and his case is familiar to a large number of our readers.

To the Editor of the Herald—SIR: I dislike the notoriety of a newspaper letter over my own signature, but in this matter duty compels me. As many are aware, I was for years in a feeble condition, many people expecting my death at any time. In 1879, while at Denver, Col., I was attacked with a mysterious hemorrhage. I lost twenty pounds of flesh in three weeks. I came home utterly broken down. My physicians said some peculiarity of the western climate produced the disorder. I made the journey again a few months later, however, without ill effects, but on my return home I was prostrated with pneumonia. My left lung soon entirely filled, and my legs and body became twice their natural size. I was obliged to sit upright in bed for several weeks in the midst of the severest agony, with my arms over my head. I was in constant fear of suffocation. Many a night I had deadly sinking spells. When the pneumonia abated the hemorrhages returned. My legs were twisted with cramps, my skin was very hot and dry, my blood circulated unevenly, my mouth was parched, I was tormented with the pains of gravel and mucus in my fluids, and my back ached excruciatingly.

I did not know what was my especial disorder, but in April, 1881, a council of five of the best physicians in Syracuse said I could not possibly recover. They advised me to try the virtues of a certain mineral spring. With pitiful helplessness I dragged myself to the cars, but was obliged to stop over at Worcester, Mass. There I was again thoroughly examined by fifteen physicians, who concurred that I was incurable. Nevertheless, I continued my journey to the springs, remained there several weeks, but returned home without benefit or hope.

My disorder was for years sapping and mining my constitution before the final attack was made. First I had chills and fever, then severe and protracted cold, then restlessness at night, nervous irritability by day, constantly distressing backache, unusual disposition to constipation, pain in the chest, torpid liver, headache and dull sensation in the base of the brain. For five years painful rheumatic pains affected my knee. Stomach and bowel derangements came in their turn, with an occasional fluttering of my heart, and an inability to draw a long breath; quick fatigue followed much conversation; irregularity of appetite succeeded. Fitful pains of a neuralgic order flirted about my body, and after a day of hard work, my arms would feel numb, as if I had had a touch of paralysis. So terrible at times did my back and arms ache that at the close of work I would lie on my couch for an hour with arms upraised in vain attempt for relief. After a night of restlessness and hallucinations, I would wake in the morning with such a distressing headache that I could not arise until I had drunk a cup of strong coffee or tea.

The disease which had fastened on me during all these years my physicians said was Bright's disease of the kidneys, pronounced by every medical authority to be incurable. Having exhausted all authorized remedies, I dismissed my medical attendants and began the use of Warner's safe cure in December, 1881. I faithfully persevered for two and one-half years, and it has saved my life and restored my health, when twenty of the most competent physicians said I could not recover. I have taken over 200 bottles, following all diet rules and directions.

I have hitherto refrained from publishing details of my case, because I wished to secure permanent effects before stating results, but as I have been comparatively a well man for the last two years and able to attend to my business daily, wholly through the preparation named, I feel that I ought to spread its merits before the world. If you see fit to publish what I have written I shall be gratified.

Yours, etc., DR. S. G. MARTIN.

"Oh, Mary! dear Mary!
Why look you so pale?
Your bright eye lacks lustre,
Your cheek tells a tale!"

"Oh, husband! dear husband!
My heart feels like lead:
In my bosom a sinking,
An ache in my head!"

"Oh, that green tea you drink, love!
Oh, love, if you knew,
Of the poison that paints it,
The fell Prussian Blue!"

You never would taste it,
Be led, love, by me:
Let me send for a can of EOLA'S rare Tea."

Now with cheeks like fresh roses
May laughs in her glee,
And in blooming health blesses
EOLA'S rare Tea.

What Baking Powder Shall We Buy?

The presence of Lime in Baking Powders results from the use of Inferior Cream of Tartar in their manufacture. The Cream of Tartar of the market, from which they are made, contains Lime in amounts varying from six to twenty per cent., and hence these powders contain this impurity as a foreign substance to a corresponding extent, which is of no value, but a positive detriment to any powder in which it is found.

In order that the public may fully understand the extent to which impurities may exist even in so-called Cream Tartar Powders, this Company has procured from some of the most noted chemists in the country, analyses showing the amount of Lime contained in different samples of Price's Baking Powder. The result is as follows:

| | Lime in Price's Baking Powder. |
|---|---|
| Prof. Schedler's Analysis | 3.02 per cent. |
| Prof. Chandler's Analysis | 4.97 " |
| Prof. Laidlow's Analysis | 6.72 " |
| Prof. Mott's Analysis | 6.08 " |
| Prof. Habirshaw's Analysis | 11.85 " |

NO LIME IN ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

The Royal Baking Powder is made from Cream of Tartar specially refined and prepared for its use by patent processes by which Tartrate of Lime is totally eliminated.

This highly important result has been attained only with great labor and expense. In money alone a quarter of a million dollars has been invested in patents, machinery and appliances by which the crude Cream of Tartar, being procured direct from the wine districts of Europe and subjected in this country to these exclusive processes, is rendered entirely free, not only from the objectionable Tartrate of Lime, but from other foreign substances.

This greatly adds to the cost of manufacturing Royal Baking Powder; but, as all its other ingredients are selected and prepared with the same precise care, and, regardless of labor or expense, an article is produced that is entirely free from any extraneous substance, and chemically pure in all respects.

No lime, earth, alum, or impurity of any kind can, by inadvertence or by the use of adulterated articles or otherwise, be introduced into the "Royal," and it contains no ingredients except those certified by the most eminent chemists necessary to make a pure, wholesome and perfect Baking Powder.

It costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the only "absolutely pure" Baking Powder made.

Molecular Telephone.

The following correspondence is right to the point and of special interest to this city in view of the fact that the City Council has just authorized the new company to do business here.

OFFICE MOLECULAR TELEPHONE CO.,
No. 67 Wall Street,
NEW YORK, December 5th, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In response to inquiries which have been made by parties interested in this company, and having contracts with it, we beg to submit copies of the correspondence which have passed between the company and its counsel, Messrs. Wheeler H. Peckham, William S. Knox and A. Q. Keasbey, relating to the recent decision of Judge Wallace, sustaining the injunction against Drawbaugh.

We desire to add that the effect of this decision is to clear the field of all competitors other than the Bell Company and renders immensely valuable the patents held by this company.

The question at issue between this company and the Bell is not that we infringe their devices, but whether Bell's patent covers the broad art of transmitting speech by electricity: in other words, whether Bell is entitled to the absolute control of a principle.

There has never yet been a case wherein any patent has been given such a broad determination. The effect would be to limit the field of invention to only a score of patents, and bar the use of improvements no matter how meritorious.

The claim of Bell to the broad art of transmitting speech by electricity by means of the undulatory current, even if sustained, would not affect the right of this company to continue business, as the instruments manufactured under its patents, as proved by the highest experts, operate in an entirely different manner, and consequently do not infringe.

Messrs. Wheeler H. Peckham, William S. Knox, A. Q. Keasbey, Counsel Molecular Telephone Co.

GENTLEMEN: Will you favor me with your opinion of the decision of Judge Wallace, lately rendered in the telephone case, as the same affects any of the questions raised in litigation between this company and the American Bell Telephone Co. And oblige, very respectfully,

[Signed] C. F. LIVERMORE,
President of the Molecular Telephone Company.
New York, Dec. 4th, 1884.

CHARLES F. LIVERMORE, Esq., President Molecular Telephone Co.:

In reply to yours 4th inst. we would say that, in our opinion, the decision of Judge Wallace only affects the single defense set up by your company, among many others, of the inventions of Daniel Drawbaugh, which were set up by way of anticipation of Bell's patent. Indeed, Judge Wallace says that by the pleadings and arguments of counsel, practically the question for him to decide was whether Bell or Drawbaugh was the original inventor of the telephone and the principle involved in its operation. It seems to have been conceded in the case that either Bell or Drawbaugh was the original inventor of the telephone in the broad sense. Such a concession is, in our opinion, fatal to a fair trial or comprehensive decision of the merits of Bell's alleged invention and the validity of his patent.

Your company rely, by way of anticipation, upon prior discoveries and inventions, which are proved, with a single exception, by publications and contemporaneous printed documents.

There was no defense of non infringement made in the Drawbaugh case, an important question in your case, neither does Bell's patent of 1876 seem to have been seriously attacked in what seems to us its manifestly vulnerable points, and Judge Wallace devotes but a trifling space to its consideration and adopts the construction of the Circuit Court in Massachusetts in cases where there was the same want of vigorous attack, and where there was also the same fatal concession of Bell's title to the invention of the telephone.

It seems also from the language of Judge Wallace's decision that it was also conceded that Bell or Drawbaugh was the discoverer of the undulatory current, and that it was the contention to which of them that discovery belonged. Nothing could be more unfounded than such a claim. The title of either or both of them is disproved by official documents that put that question beyond doubt.

In conclusion, we see nothing in the decision referred to in your letter which has any effect, as a decision, upon any of the questions involved in the alleged discoveries and inventions of Daniel Drawbaugh.

Worth Remembering.

There are 43 lots on Main and Los Angeles streets in the Childs tract worth from $1000 to $2500 per lot. There are one hundred and twenty lots on Eleventh, Twelfth and Cross streets, worth $700 to $900 per lot; and there are 37 lots on the southeast, worth, every one of them, $600. These 200 lots are offered on the most approved homestead plan at $600 average per lot. Remember, too, that the terms are $25 per month—two years payments without interest.

The Increase in Value

Of the Childs' tract is at the same rate as all the central property in Los Angeles for the past three years. It has been taxed as an orchard during the ownership of Mr. Childs for thirty years past, but now, with graded streets, electric lights, and the scores of beautiful homes to be erected on the lots, it will take its place with other improved property surrounding it.
